

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 27, 1853.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

One of the most important agencies for enlightening the world is Tract Distribution. We refer to it now for the sake of inviting attention to some resolutions adopted at our late Anniversary; particularly to the one recommending to the several churches "to raise funds for the purchase of Tracts, and to appoint suitable agents to distribute them when they may find having and promising fields." We speak of this, when we say, that the Society did not adopt this resolution as a mere matter of form; it was adopted in the hope that our churches could act, and go into the work of Tract Distribution with new vigor.

What we wish to say is this:—That churches are not to suppose that, because the work is committed to them, the fields in which they are to operate need be in their own immediate vicinity, so that their work may be done at the least possible expense. We do not think the Society contemplated the doing of the work upon so limited a scale. If it came to the knowledge of a church in Rhode Island that there is an inviting field of labor in Pennsylvania, or to the knowledge of a church in New Jersey, that there is a good opening in Virginia, or in Tennessee; we suppose that it should be regarded as something like a Macedonian call upon those churches, respectively, to enter into the fields thus brought to their notice, by sending out collectors with Tracts for circulation among the inhabitants. Such kind of labor, we suppose, would fulfill in some degree what the Tract Society intended by its resolution.

As for the more limited operation of churches in fields adjacent to their own locality, we certainly do not undervalue it, nor would we deny that it is, in part, answer to the intention of the Society by the resolution referred to. Certainly, there are many are not to be neglected for those at a great distance, especially if the nearer ones look like fields whithering in the harvest. But it is not unfrequently happens, that the people in the vicinity of a Seventh-day Baptist church are the most unlikely of all others to give the Sabbath question a fair investigation. They have so long accustomed themselves to pervert the obvious teaching of Scripture on this most important question, that they cannot see the light, though it shines so brilliantly. There is but little to be done with them. However, let even these be occasionally admonished, in faithful words and in love.

On the supposition that churches will look out for inviting fields, where they may scatter the seeds of truth, and will resolve upon acting efficiently in the matter, we suggest, that it is not necessary, though in some cases it may be desirable, to send out a minister as collector. In our opinion, too much importance has been frequently been attached to having one employed in this business who can engage the point with him, and deliver lectures to the people as he goes. We think it were often better to have one, who knows how to hold his tongue. Sometimes, it is true, a public argument is valuable; but in the majority of instances, people prefer, upon a question that involves a complete revolution of their practice, to think the matter over quietly, without being subjected to the chafings of dispute, or to such importunities as one who earnestly maintains his argument is likely to employ. They want to take time for consideration; the quiet, unobtrusive way of simply depositing a Tract in each person's hand, without stopping to argue the point, will in a great majority of cases produce the most favorable results. Keep your ministers at home, then, if you need them, and employ some good, honest-hearted, unassuming brother, whose general deportment will commend him as a Christian, to go out on these errands of good. Let it be some brother who is known to be a man of prayer, and who, after he has circulated his little books, will go to some secret place, drop down upon his knees, and implore the God of Truth to accept and bless the labor performed. His fervent prayers will do more good than all discursive arguments.

Now, as it is not necessary to send out a minister, nor even a person of considerable talking abilities, as a collector, it is evident that every church, by within itself all the requisite agency for fulfilling the intention of the Society. And if all the churches in the Denomination would wake up in earnest to the work, we think that the year to come would show more accomplished for the cause of truth, than any previous year of our Denomination's existence.

But the mode of operating contemplated involves expense. If a Rhode Island church, or a church in the State of Wisconsin, should send a collector to Virginia, or Tennessee, or Michigan, it would cost something. His expenses must be paid, his labor compensated. And, alas! so many of our churches think that if they do but sustain (or half sustain) ministers within their own bounds, they are doing all their duty, and a little more, that to suggest the duty of sustaining Tract Distribution, also at any considerable expense will, no doubt, seem like the imposition of an intolerable burden. But do not be alarmed, brethren; you have yet, even the best of you, hardly made a beginning towards those sacrifices which duty to the Lord Jesus Christ demands. You are far, far behind your duty. It is high time that you awake out of sleep, and understand that your mission is to redeem your fellow creatures from ignorance and sin. Open your purses, then, and not only sustain your ministers, but your Tract Distributors also. Talk out about expense; what is that kind of service worth which costs nothing? Your money was deposited in your possession, that you might use it in doing good; think whether you can make a better use of it than in the way we propose.

JOHN FREDERICK OBERLIN.

Thanks for the lives of the great and good. Thanks for the influence of their examples. "Principles instruct us—precepts guide us—but example moves us. Example is principle put into action. Example is precept embodied, living and in action. We not only see what is done, and what ought to be done, but what can be done, and how it is done. It appeals to all of our faculties at once; it fixes the attention, engages the imagination, instructs the judgment, moves the heart, subdues the will, awakens the conscience, and unites the memory." Such being its influence, it is well that we should hold frequent converse with the lives of those that have left to us the rich legacy of their noble deeds. We were forcibly reminded of this while reading the memoirs of Oberlin.

JOHN FREDERICK OBERLIN was born at Strasbourg, France, August, 1740. His parents, though not in affluent circumstances, were very well educated, and devoted much time to the careful instruction of their children. The subject of this sketch was early noted for his benevolent spirit, united with a good degree of civility and daring. He was ever ready to assist the needy and defend the oppressed, even at the risk of his own reputation or life. Being ardent, enthusiastic, and susceptible, the prayers, religious songs and reading of his mother made a deep and lasting impression upon his mind. He resolved to devote himself to the ministry. While a student of Theology, he was induced by his mother to attend the preaching of Dr. Lorenz, which, if not the origin of, at least gave a more evangelical turn to, his piety. At the age of twenty, he made an entire, an unreserved consecration of himself to the Lord. He completed his educational course about this time, but continued seven years longer in private life, either studying or teaching. During this time, he seems to have been schooling himself, unconsciously perhaps, for his future sphere. He formed habits the most simple and self-denying. He generally prepared his meals in a pan hung over his study lamp.

While living in this simple and secluded manner, he was solicited by M. Scouter, a Lutheran minister, to succeed him as pastor to Waldbach, in the mountainous canton of Ban de la Roche, or St. Etienne, in the north-eastern part of France. This was a cold and sterile region. Scouter found the people semi-barbarous, speaking the old Patois dialect, the French language of the twelfth century. The canton had been desolated by wars. The roads being destroyed, there was no communication with the surrounding country.

But it was a region where the rights of conscience were inviolate and sacred. When it was incorporated as a part of France, it was stipulated, that here liberty of conscience should be enjoyed. Persecuted Protestants, from time to time, had fled to this spot for safety. Although safe, yet, from the nature of the region, they lived in a state of the strict misery and degradation. Their ignorance, also, was deplorable.

M. Scouter, on his first visit to Waldbach, found the people in a wretched state, shown into a miserable cottage, filled with children in a wild and noisy state. It was with difficulty that he could find the master. At last he found a decrepit old man lying on a bed in one corner of the room. When Scouter inquired of him, what he taught the children, his frank reply was, "Nothing, Sir." "Nothing! how is that?" inquired Scouter. "Because I know nothing myself." "Why then, Sir, I had been taking care of the Waldbach pigs for a great number of years, and when I got too old and infirm for that employment, they sent me here to take care of the children." The name of school-master had become so contemptible, that it had to be changed to that of Regent, before any one qualified could be found to enter upon the duties of teacher among them.

Oberlin entered upon his duties. At first, he found great difficulty in overcoming their prejudices. He often ran narrow chances of being mobbed. To rescue his parishioners from their half-savage state, he built roads, supplied implements of husbandry, and established a sort of bank for lending money. The young men were sent off to learn trades. Habitations were previously hewn from rocks or dug in the sides of mountains. Under the superintendence of Oberlin, suitable cottages were constructed. For many years previous to 1799, the people had lived upon wild apples and pears. From this time till Oberlin, they lived chiefly on a degenerate species of potatoe. He planted fruit and ornamental trees—introduced new varieties of vegetables and grains—gave lectures on agriculture—formed an agricultural society—had the young instructed in chemistry and botany—distributed prizes to successful farmers—thus employing every means for supplying their physical necessities, or adding to their comforts. He was assisted in these efforts by pecuniary contributions from his friends.

Neither did he forget their intellectual or religious wants. He established one of the first, if not the first infant school that was ever organized. In order that he might have suitable teachers for such schools, he took young ladies into his own family, and trained them for the work. He built school-houses—made books—changed their language from the Patois to the pure French—established concerts of prayer, with various other means of religious instruction, besides the stated duties of preaching. He was, at the same time, minister, teacher, author, farmer, mechanic, and physician.

The effects of his labors soon began to manifest themselves. The feelings of those rude mountaineers were very soon changed from prejudice and aversion to love and admiration. They soon began to practice his precepts, and emulate his examples. When he first went there, the inhabitants could go to church only by turns, borrowing each other's clothes for the purpose. His parish was soon converted from one of the most miserable to one of the most prosperous, peaceable, and happy parishes in France. The fame of his doings soon spread abroad. Strangers from various parts of the world were attracted to the spot. During the Reign of Terror, when war and carnage raged over France, when social ties were abrogated, property confiscated, ministers imprisoned, Waldbach was an asylum—Oberlin prosecuted his labors unmolested. The Royal and Central Agricultural Society of Paris voted him a gold medal, in acknowledgment of the services he had rendered to agriculture and to mankind—for the perfect model his society presented of social economy. Louis XVIII. presented him with the emblem of the Legion of Honor, as an expression of thanks for the services he had rendered his country. On the organization of the British and Foreign Bible Society, he, by the request of the Society, became its first foreign correspondent, and, under its direction, organized an auxiliary society at Waldbach, through which means some ten thousand copies of the New Testament were sent out in circulation.

In personal appearance, Oberlin was rather under the medium size—dignified, grave, descending, affectionate, and polite—very courteous to inferiors, always pulling off his hat to adults, and taking children by the hand, as he met them. The effect of this was soon manifest upon the hardy mountaineers—their remarkable and universal civility of manners astonished even a Frenchman. In conversation he was fluent, communicative, and inquisitive. He performed the most trifling acts of life as a religious duty. He decided all questions of doubt by lot, believing in a special Providence. For this purpose, he kept two tickets in his pocket, with his initials on one, and no on the other. In all cases of doubtful action, he, with prayer, drew one of these, and the course to be pursued was determined. He was noted for frugality, never having been known to owe any man. On hearing of the sufferings of slaves in this country, he would use no more of the products of slave labor. Fearing that the paper currency of the French Revolution would become a disgrace to his country, he redeemed all the broken bills that passed, for the space of twenty-five years, to come into his canton. His preaching was simple, energetic, colloquial, and affectionate, using many familiar figures, allusions, and anecdotes. His doctrinal views were mostly orthodox, differing, perhaps, now and then, on a minor point. When he became so old that he could no longer discharge the duties of a pastor—which was not till he was upwards of eighty—he used to spend most of his time in prayer for his flock. Taking the church register, he would go over the names in order, praying for each individual. After being pastor of Waldbach nearly sixty years, he was called to his rest at the advanced age of eighty-five. A funeral procession, over two miles in length, followed his remains to the grave. The deep-seated affection of his people for him is finely illustrated by an anecdote of one of his servants. One, in tears, being asked the cause of her grief, replied, that she feared there were no servants in heaven, so that she might there wait upon her good pastor. Another anecdote illustrates the power of such a life and character in influencing others to like action. A clergyman was once on a time listening to some one reciting the life of Oberlin. Inspired by the noble example, he sprang to his feet, exclaiming, "I too will do something for the poor and needy." Oberlin College was the result.

MEETING OF NEW JERSEY CHURCHES.

The Seventh-day Baptist Churches of New Jersey held their Yearly Meeting with the Church in Plainfield, commencing on Sixth-day, Oct. 14th, 1853, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The delegation from the West Jersey Churches, Shiloh and Marlboro, was quite small, owing to the fact that the brethren of those Churches, being mainly an agricultural people, are, in this month of the year, very busily engaged in their Fall's work. A full attendance was given by the brethren and sisters of the Piscataway and Plainfield Churches to all the exercises of the Meeting. All present seemed to unite in the desire of worshipping God in the spirit of holiness, praying for higher attainments in our Christian pursuit, and a more perfect consecration to the work of glorifying our Heavenly Father.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by David Clawson, from Col. 3: 1—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." The grace of God bestows spiritual life upon the heart dead in trespasses and sins. In our regeneration, the Scriptures represent us as rising, through the merits of our Saviour's atonement, from the destruction of sin to a state of reconciliation with God. Having put on Christ, it remains for us to exhibit to the world, not only as aiming, but a striving for heaven. There is the kingdom of God, to become the happy subjects of which must be our great endeavor. There is the city of the righteous—the New Jerusalem—in which are the dwellings prepared for our sanctified spirits. There is the society of the saints and angels, rendered more blessed by the presence of our Saviour. Finally, there are those sacred employments of casting our crowns at the feet of Jesus, and studying with unveiled vision the manifestations of divine wisdom and power.

After this discourse, the pastors of the several churches presented verbal reports of the state of religion among the people of their charge.

In the Piscataway church, an encouraging interest in religious things is manifested, the prayer meetings are fully attended, and nearly all seem desirous of actively engaging in the cross-bearing labors of the gospel.

In the Shiloh Church, a better religious feeling appears to be reviving in the hearts of a portion of the members; prayers are requested for the unregenerate, and hopes are entertained that the Spirit, which trieth the hearts of men, will again visit them with an unction from Heaven.

The Marlboro church remains spiritually in nearly the same condition in which it was a year since. Strenuous efforts are being made to build another house of worship, and it is confidently expected that by next summer a commodious building for this purpose will be erected.

Preaching Sabbath evening by W. B. Gillett from Matt. 5: 11, 12—"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceedingly glad; for great is your reward in heaven." We are not to expect peace in this life, but the most trying afflictions. Christianity is at war with the wickedness of the world, and the world is in arms against it. Neither are we to expect rewards in this world. The blessings which we receive in the flesh, are not given because they are due us, but through the goodness of our Father. All rewards received hereafter are inseparably connected with obedience—with voluntary submission to the will of God. The rewards of the righteous will be received in approbation, and not as a debt. Whether we are saved or not, we are under obligation to serve God, because he is our moral governor. In the Judgment we shall not be surprised to see the poor, humble, despised follower of Christ, receiving the highest praises from God. The truly devoted in this life will never meet with bitter disappointments; he will discipline his heart to take cheerfully what Providence sends upon him. We are never satisfied with the attainments of this life, but the rewards which are above will fill with complete joy the spirit of the saint; hence no murmuring in heaven. Better be tried here, so as to be prepared to enjoy greater happiness hereafter.

The Sabbath morning discourse was preached by David Clawson, from Heb. 2: 18—"For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." The character of Christ, as an Apostle, Prophet, Priest, Saviour, and Mediator, was briefly alluded to. The nature and intensity of his sufferings are shown in his divine humiliation, in his exposure to temptations, and in the agony of the crucifixion. Christians are expected to honor God, by overcoming all temptations, and enduring all trials, through prayer and watchfulness. To receive aid from Christ in our sufferings, it is necessary for us to renounce the love of the world, to lean upon God entirely for spiritual strength, and render unto him the homage of our highest love. Christ is a wise counselor, because he knows our frame; he is a safe intercessor, because he knows the nature of human frailty; he is an able deliverer from temptation, because he has foiled the arch-fiend in his most insidious designs.

This discourse was followed by one from W. B. Gillett; text, Ps. 35: 2—"For he hath scattered himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found to be hateful." He spoke of the delusions of sin, which beguile the transgressor into feelings of peace and security. Some suppose that God regards the general character only, and not every little act of a man. Others imagine that he is satisfied with a partial repentance, which can be delayed till to-morrow or some other future time. Some cry, all is well, when their peace is not made with God. Many are deluded in thinking there is no necessity of present humiliation, because they have mortified their nature sufficiently, when they put on Christ at some past day. He concluded by showing the economy of these sins, and indicating the way of escape from them through the grace of God.

After the morning services, the sufferings and dying love of our Saviour were commemorated in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper.

Preaching in the evening after the Sabbath, by H. H. Baker, from Luke 13: 20, 21—"Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God? It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." The theme of the discourse was religious progression—illustrated in part by the processes of natural and intellectual progression. In the physical world, the most stupendous results often proceed from insignificant causes, and hang balanced for a time in uncertainty, by the least attenuated thread of circumstances. The intellect, in its progressive developments, commences with the mere rudiments of knowledge, and advances slowly, but surely, until it is able to predict events which will happen a thousand years in the future. The existence of the church at one time depended on a single promise—subsequently on a single individual—soon after, all its members met in one room—but now it is as widely spread as the boundaries of the earth. You all can recollect when your consciences were first slightly touched by the feeling of your infirmities, and subsequently aroused to the full view of the exceeding sinfulness of your sins. The Christian's advancement, from the time of conversion until he reaches heaven, was delineated.

Preaching First-day morning by David Clawson, from Ps. 89: 15—"Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance." The joyful sound spoken of in this passage refers to the sound of the trumpet of jubilee, which was blown to proclaim liberty to the enslaved. It is a beautiful illustration of the power of the Gospel, the legitimate object of which is to set forth truth for the salvation of man. In proclaiming gospel truth, one must have the grace of God abounding in the heart. Many of the blessings which the lover of God receives were enumerated.

In the evening following, preaching by W. C. Whitford, from Phil. 1: 27—"Only for your consolation be it as becomes the gospel of Christ." In the Business Meeting, First-day afternoon, W. B. Gillett being Chairman, on motion of David Dunn, it was voted, that hereafter the Yearly Meeting of the New Jersey

Seventh-day Baptist Churches be held so as to alternate regularly with the East and West Jersey churches; and that the next Yearly Meeting be held with the Marlboro church, on Sixth-day before the third Sabbath in November, 1854. On motion of I. D. Tietworth, it was voted, that a synopsis of the discourses and proceedings of this Yearly Meeting be furnished for publication in the Sabbath Recorder.

W. C. Warrren, Rec. Sec.

NOTES BY A CORRESPONDENT.

Journey West—Northwestern Association—Palo Alto Mission.

We left Albion, Erie Co., N. Y., September 24th, and in one hour and a half were set down in the village of Niagara Falls. A company of six of us, including a tall Kentuckian, hired a carriage for $4, the cheapest we could find; and soon we were crossing the justly celebrated Suspension Bridge, on our way to the Cataract on the Canada side, via Lady's Lane and the Burning Spring. Two hours brought us to Table Rock, where the visitor has a view of the foaming cataract in all its indescribable grandeur. At different points on our way thither we saw the Falls, and the different directions of the rainbow; but here we saw the watery element leaping and frolicking, and seemingly mad and frantic in her glory. We stood within a foot of the edge of Table Rock, and, as we stooped down, within three or four days of its fall—of eternity! gazing and admiring, and felt ourselves exhilarated, fearing, yet drawn and almost chained to the spot; and oh! what thoughts we then had of the majesty, power, wisdom and dominion of that Being at whose bidding this mighty stream continues to flow on, and pour and roar from age to age! We were urged to go under the sheet, and were inclined to pay our half dollar, but our time was too limited; so we waved that for the poor.

Arrived at Buffalo in the evening, we had a pretty fair demonstration of the power of the cabmen and runners of that place. Certainly, if they ever exceed the racket and confusion, the pulling and hauling and swearing of that evening, we tremble for the traveler and sojourner, lest a similar fate to that of the cities of the plain befall them. One followed us some distance, pressing very earnestly the claims of the Central Michigan Route, and when informed that we were bound by the Southern Michigan, he vociferated, at the same time extending his hand:—"Good-bye, Sir; good-bye, man; if you have any children with you, I advise you to take a school marm with you; for they will be twenty-one years of age before you get there; good-bye, Sir, farewell!"—and with a volley of good wishes, evidently designed to make us feel good-natured, he reluctantly backed out.

The promise was, "through to Monroe in fourteen hours." The Lake was remarkably smooth, but the boat did not arrive at M. till long after the train had left; so we put back (as it seemed to us) to Toledo, where, at 6 P. M. of the 4th, we took cars for Chicago. Delayed that night, by some fault of the iron horse, we did not reach the boat for Milwaukee (on Lake Michigan) in time for our baggage to come on board. But some of us were on board, and the boat was off. The writer stopped at Waukegan, and returned to Chicago in search of his and others' baggage. Round all, and returned next day, arriving in Milton the evening of the 8th.

Here, for the first time in our life, we set foot upon prairie soil, and looked with delight upon the great expanse—"of bottom land—flat as a pan-cake—flat as a green." The friends in Milton received us with open arms, welcoming us to as hospitable homes as any Seventh-day Baptist deserves—good enough for that people, and we had almost said, too good for those who are not; but we will say, hospitality as cordial, comforting and unbounded as it is to be found any where. We verily believe the brethren of our order are remarkable for the manner and matter of entertainment. What we have said of Milton will apply to all whom we visited West. The pastor, Bro. V. Hull, was absent on a visit to Dakota. His supply, Eld. Coon, took the writer from house to house on his agency. At first it was thought fifty dollars was all they could raise for the Palestine Mission; but, without urging or screwing, their donations amounted to $128 37. We found the Albion church building an Academy, yet their liberality, subscribed to the amount of $34. The Christians church, a feeble band, but growing, gave $24 25. It is with heart-felt gratitude that we mention the aid rendered in collecting by the pastors of these churches—Elders J. Campbell and A. W. Coon.

Through the kindness of Elder V. Hull, we were carried to Walworth, where the North-Western Association convened on the 24th inst. The sessions throughout were very harmonious and spirited. The discussions showed that the brethren were not behind in their views of duty and their zeal in the cause of Reform. Indeed, it was one of the most pleasant and refreshing Associations we ever attended. We heartily wished for the presence of more of our Eastern brethren, that they might realize how good it was to meet with kindred spirits, and so many of them, in the home field of the Far West.

Eld. C. P. Hull, the pastor at Walworth, is doing a good work. His people are all united with him as a brother beloved and successful in advancing the cause.

Our interview with Eld. Varnum Hull was peculiarly gratifying. His eye had been upon Free Missions, and our own course in former years—was well acquainted with the rise of McGrawville College—the change of Sabbath views, and the trials incident to our becoming Seventh-day Baptists. Never shall we forget his eloquent plea for the slave, and the principle of Free Missions, before the Association. Nor shall we forget how our hearts melted as water at parting. The Lord bless his servant with grace and holy boldness to earnestly and successfully advocate the cause of Christ.

The Walworth church contributed $38 72 for the Palestine Mission. A pledge of—dollars was to have been redeemed at the meeting, but the brother was detained at home by illness. Fifteen dollars forwarded by the Southampton church, the prospect of ten more from the same, swelled the above amounts to the comfortable sum of $300, which is doing well for people in a new country, and may be received as a pledge of material aid for years to come.

Of the richness of the soil, the beauty and advantages of the country in which our people are located, the half has not been told; we hardly dare speak our mind lest we be not credited. We now have full faith in Wisconsin, and we think that all who go there must, if they can leave at all, come away regretting that they had not sooner believed the many truthful reports concerning the intrinsic worth of that goodly land. Milton, Albion, and Christians, are pleasant locations, with many farms for sale, among which are some rare chances for new comers. The brethren at these places agreed that we should see a fine country at Walworth; and, sure enough, a more beautiful prairie than Big Foot, need not be desired; had our visit been in summer, we should have thought it a near neighbor to Eden. Wm. M. Jones, Oct. 10, 1853.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—A recent number of the Chinese Repository contains a carefully prepared schedule of the missionaries of the several societies who have been engaged in the Chinese Mission, from the arrival of Dr. Morrison, in 1807, to the close of last year, from which it appears that the total number is 130, of whom 73 are now in China, and five are absent on account of ill health or for other reasons. Of the remaining seventy-two, twenty-five died in the field of labor or on the passage home, including four who were drowned, and three who met a violent death at the hands of the natives. Forty-eight have retired; most of them on account of their own ill health, or that of their families, but some of them through discouragement at the little progress they made in learning the Chinese language. Of the whole number, fifty-seven were Englishmen, eighty-eight Americans, and thirteen came from the continent. Of the missionaries now in China, including the five now absent, twenty-three are Englishmen, five are from the continent, and twenty-four are from America.

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR BURMA.—The Convention of Baptist missionaries at Mapaim, in April and May last, after a protracted and laborious session, in which the principles and methods of missionary action were thoroughly discussed, and plans were laid for the prosecution of the great work which the opening of Burma sets before them, passed the following resolution:—

Resolved, That, in view of our dependence on the blessing of God for success in the great work in which we are engaged, and especially in anticipation of the increased efforts about to be put forth for the evangelization of Burma, we will individually, at the stations with which we may be severally connected, set apart the first Thursday in November next as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, humbly to supplicate the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon ourselves and the perishing souls under for whom we labor; and that we will invite the native churches with which we may be connected to unite with us in this exercise.

A KAREN CHURCH MEETING.—Mr. Thomas describes the proceedings of the church at Yaville, which at the time of his visiting them, received for baptism fourteen converts:—

"One who has only been in the church meetings in America can have but a faint idea of what our examinations are here. Many of the candidates were aged persons, who had studied no catechism, who were unable to read. They had only been taught the first principles of our holy religion. Hence it was not in consideration of their attainments in theology that we accepted them. They knew only that they were sinners, that Christ died to redeem sinners, and that they trusted alone in Him. They wished to be baptized in order to obey the command of Christ. When I had ascertained as much as this, I would turn to the assistant and the members of the church, and inquire what had been their manner of life during the year—if they had sinned like Christians. I had, it is true, some sinners, but could not but ask, 'Can any man forbid water, that these should be baptized?' I durst not. The church unanimously received them. The judgment will disclose the correctness of our decision."

THE MAINS LAW IN ENGLAND.—The Temperance men in England are about to petition their Parliament for a prohibitory liquor law. There are 2,637 licensed brewers in the British Islands, 88,400 persons licensed to sell spirits and wine, and 88,638 licensed to sell beer. In 1851 there were 31,000,000 gallons of spirits consumed in Great Britain in one year, with nearly 5,000,000 gallons of foreign wine. The whole amount being according to the public revenue is over fifteen millions sterling. It will be seen, from this statement, that the Temperance men have a formidable opposition to encounter.

LONDON CITY MISSION SOCIETY.—This is the largest Society of the kind in the world. It employed last year no less than 297 missionaries, who were constantly engaged in domestic visitation. The number of visits they made during the year was 1,240,318, and they distributed 1,765,121 religious tracts. In their visits, they read the Scriptures on 379,687 occasions; they held 20,417 social religious meetings; they induced 2,317 adults to attend public worship, and 6,753 children to attend Sunday school.

THE NEW REFORMATION IN IRELAND.—Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D.D., recently delivered several lectures in New York on the Reformation now going on in Ireland, in which large numbers of Papists are turning Protestants. He stated that "The Irish Reformation Society," composed of ministers of the Church of England, had four years ago only 14 ordained missionaries, and the whole number of their agents was only 55. Since then their number had been augmented, until now they could count 45 missionaries, and the total number of their agents was 359. In the year 1848 they had located but fifteen stations, but now they have missions in twenty-seven of the thirty-two counties of Ireland, together with thirty-four local Committees constantly carrying on the good work in which the Society is engaged. During the last year the voices of four hundred pulpits had proclaimed the truths of Protestantism, and preached against the errors of Romanism. Some years ago the Lord Archbishop of Tuam announced his approval of their work, which was hailed with joy by the Society. But now the Archbishop of Armagh and Dublin also give their support to the movement, and not only that, but the Episcopal rulers throughout Ireland give their countenance and active cooperation. This Society was accomplishing an immense amount of good in various ways, and gospel truths not only went forth from the pulpit, but they had a novel mode of carrying on the warfare by posting placards at every corner of the streets and on fences in country districts, on which were printed, in bold letters, a few words designed to arrest the attention of the passer-by. In the last year, 43,750 of these placards had been posted, and during the same period 709,000 handbills had been distributed about. It was impossible to walk the streets without having one of them thrust into your hand.

A Newspaper Agent writing from the St. Louis Western Watchman has the following notice of a prompt and efficient agent of that paper—a man the like of whom do much to forward the cause for which they themselves are professedly laboring, while nominally serving others:—

"One of our most devoted Missouri ministers, a genuine Keweenaw, by the way, whose zeal is extending the circulation of the Watchman is worthy of imitation, lately baptized a Methodist, as his venerated father has done many times. On transmitting his name as a subscriber, he says, 'I hardly let the hair of my head grow, before I said, Now, Brother C., you are a Baptist out and out, and you must let me send your name as a subscriber to the Western Watchman. He readily consented; so you please send him the paper at once.'"

"This brother makes it a rule to get all whom he baptizes, or unites in marriage, to subscribe for the Watchman, and he has been successful. His rule is to 'make hay while the sun shines,' and to 'strike while the iron is hot.' That is the secret of success."

A PRAYER ANSWERED.—The Petersburg Democrat tells a story of a little boy of that city, who, having recently lost his father, found himself debarred thereby from attending school as formerly, and, in the fullness of his faith, he determined to seek the whereabouts of that father to which he had dedicated himself to look for other and higher blessings. In the simplicity of his heart he sat down and gravely wrote a letter to his Redeemer, thinking, perhaps, that so formal a mode of preferring his requests would meet with greater attention. What was the surprise of this postmaster, Wm. N. Friend, Esq., on discovering among the contents of his letter-box, one morning lately, a missive directed to "Jesus Christ!" Opening it he read the story of the boy's wants, and with a noble kindness, which we are not selfish enough to deprive our readers of the pleasure or profit of hearing, he deposited in the envelope the amount required, and directed it to the young supplicant.

HOPEFUL OF MISSIONARY LABOR IN AFRICA.—Rev. J. L. Wilson, a retired missionary of the Old School Presbyterian Church, from Africa, recently stated, as among the results of missionary labor in Africa, the gathering of more than one hundred Christian churches, containing ten thousand hopeful converts; the establishment of a hundred and fifty Christian schools, in which from twelve to fifteen thousand youth were receiving Christian and other instruction. The Bible has been translated, and its truths brought into contact, directly or indirectly, with a million of human minds. They had given to Africa eighteen written dialects; and all this without grammars or teachers, or any extraneous aid; and this had been the work of Protestant missionaries within the space of twenty years.

FASTING AND PRAYER FOR PREACHERS.—The New York East Conference, at its last session, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:—

"In conformity with the recommendation of the last General Conference, for the annual conference to appoint days of fasting and prayer, with a view to pray the great Head of the Church to call forth more laborers into his vineyard, it is hereby Resolved, That the second Friday of December next be set apart for that purpose, and that it be observed in all our worshiping assemblies."

MISSIONARY BISHOPS.—The General Triennial Convention of the Episcopal Church, in session in New York last week, elected two Missionary Bishops, viz: Rev. W. J. Kipp, of Albany, N. Y., for California; and Rev. T. F. Scott, of Georgia, for the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A letter appears in the London Patriot from the Rev. J. J. Roberts, of Canton, which gives a partial confirmation of the report that the chief of the insurgents had formerly been instructed by him. Mr. Roberts has received a letter purporting to be from the prince, which speaks affectionately of his former acquaintance and of the instructions he received. The writer says that he has the control of several provinces, that myriads worship God daily and keep the commandments, but are very ignorant of the gospel. He desires Mr. Roberts to go to Nankin, to preach and administer baptism.

The Congregationalist states that a large Protestant book-store has been opened in Constantinople, in the very heart of the city. On its shelves are found copies of the Scriptures in twelve different languages, and there have gone forth, during the past year, more than 10,000 copies of the word of God, besides other religious books and tracts, in the various languages of that part of the world. 4000 worth of the Scriptures in the Arabic dialect have been sent into Russia during the same period.

It is said the Old School Presbyterian Board of Education has 96 academies under its care, embracing about 3000 pupils; in all of them the truths and duties of religion are inculcated by Christian teachers; their discipline is both mild and strict, and they are founded on the substantial basis of classical and mathematical study; the blessing of God is on them; several of them report more or less instances of conversions—one sixteen, another eighteen, and still another between fifty and sixty.

A writer in the Central Christian Herald, in enumerating the different religious sects in eastern Ohio, mentions, among others, the Omaha and Nottoway, which, he says, are divisions among the Neomethodists or Harmless Christians. The difference between them is said to be the wearing of beards instead of hoods and eyes, while the length and split of the coat tail is the great matter of controversy with others.

Rev. Dr. Jenkins, of the Shanghai Mission, M. E. Church South, delivered a lecture on China in Cincinnati, to an audience of twelve or fifteen hundred persons. A native Chinese, whose hair, braided, extended down his back to his heels, accompanied the Doctor, and was the object of much curiosity. A large collection was taken toward building a Methodist church in Shanghai, China.

There are now in Kentucky some six or seven free churches, having no fellowship with slavery. These have met with opposition and persecution. This is daily diminishing; access to the public mind is more easy, and the sphere of influence is continually increasing—though there are yet "the days of small things."

The Episcopal Church of the State of New York has expended nearly $4000 in endeavoring to discipline one of its Presbyters, Rev. W. F. Walker, and the business is not fully completed. The counsel for the church have had to argue six imperative motions before the civil courts of the State, and one served upon the Bishop is not yet disposed of.

There are now in Kentucky some six or seven free churches, having no fellowship with slavery. These have met with opposition and persecution. This is daily diminishing; access to the public mind is more easy, and the sphere of influence is continually increasing—though there are yet "the days of small things."

Rev. Jonathan Sawyer, of Garland, Mo., attended the recent anniversary of Bangor Theological Seminary, though seventy years old. He was the first minister in Oxford, in that State, and when the Seminary at Bangor was projected, took an active part in the enterprise. He is still vigorous in mind and body.

Two thousand five hundred members, above all removed by death or in other ways, have been added to the Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada the past year, as the results of numerous spiritual refreshings.

The average salaries of pastors and stated supplies, in New Hampshire, during the last year, i. e., from August to August, was $377. Low as this is, it is 14 per cent. higher than it was ten years ago. The average salaries of pastors of self-supporting churches is $522.

The English papers furnish unfavorable news from Madagascar. The Queen was still pursuing a course of rigorous hostility towards the Christians, who were suffering greatly from her persecutions.

The degree of D.D. has been conferred by Harvard College on Rev. Elias Riggs, late of Smyrna, but now of Constantinople, and for the last twenty-one years missionary of the American Board.

The Methodists of Maine are taking measures to raise $25,000 for the establishment of a female collegiate institute.

"WOMAN'S HOUSE CONVENTION."—A Convention assuming this popular title was held at Springfield, Mass., last week. The number of people in attendance was very large, ranging between ten and fifteen thousand.

On the last day of the Convention between five and six hundred of the finest horses on the Continent entered the inclosure in procession, and were ridden or driven, nearly all of them by their owners, twice around the course, while 10,000 delighted spectators reared the air with shouts of applause and high satisfaction—a large and efficient Band pealing forth their strains during the passing of the great tournament. In the afternoon the was a grand banquet, with seats for 1,500 persons, which were all filled, many of them by ladies. Among the speakers on the occasion were Governors Seymour, Abbott Lawrence, John M. Bonn, and Ex-Governor Floyd.

A SHIP FOR SHANGHAI.—The Herald is advertised to sail from New York on the 19th of November. By her we shall send all letters and parcels on hand for our missionaries. This is the first opportunity of the kind for several months, and it is uncertain when there will be another.

The packet ship Havre, Mulford, reports that on the 9th instant, at 41. 43. 38. 50. she was boarded by a boat from ship Sagadahoc (of Bath), Capt. Leister, from Gloucester, bound to Boston, which had lost during the passage 33 passengers by cholera. The captain's wife was very sick, and 14 passengers in a low state from sickness.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamer Asia, with European dates to Oct. 26, arrived at New York on the 26th.

The chief point in the advice brought by the Asia is that the declaration of war, voted by the Grand Council of Turkey on the 27th ult., was not actually signed by the Sultan on that day, as we were informed by the Atlantic. The Ambassadors of the mediating Powers at Constantinople were still hopeful of a peaceful settlement of the difficulty, but the warlike feeling was very high there.

The case of Miss Cunningham in Turkey continues to excite considerable religious anxiety.

Serious riots had broken out in Syria. Two hundred persons were killed in an outbreak in the Province of Naphesus.

A letter from Smyrna, dated Sept. 23, states that Martin Kosztka had that day sailed for the United States.

There were 20,143 prisoners in the jails and houses of correction of England, on April 15 last.

Cholera had broken out with great violence on board the packet-ship Isaac Wright, which struck on a rock, on 28th ult., off Cape Clear, and had to put back to Liverpool. Before the ship reached the Mersey, 47 passengers were thrown overboard, and several others died in harbor and were carried ashore. The remainder of the sick were carried in carts to the hospitals, where a large number, it was impossible to ascertain the exact number, had died.

A dreadful accident occurred on the Great Southern and Western Railway, at Striffin, near Dublin. A cattle train ran full force into a passenger train, and literally dashed it to pieces. All the cars were broken to fragments, excepting one, which, attached to the engine, was propelled by the shock of the collision to the distance of nearly three-quarters of a mile! Ten or twelve persons were killed, smashed so that their bodies could scarcely be collected. Fifty persons were wounded, some of whom cannot recover. The cause of the accident was sheer stupidity in the driver of the cattle-train, who, by-the-by, escaped scolding.

The Edinburgh News describes a magnificent carpet just completed by Templeton & Co., Mill End, Glasgow, to order for the White House. The carpet is of the patented Axminster fabric, and is the largest ever made by Messrs. Templeton, being 90 feet in length by 46 wide. The portion woven in the loom without seam is 72 feet by 31, and the remainder consists of a handsome border worked on the "filling-in" is a ruby and crimson damask, with three tasteful medallions in the center, and rich corner pieces to correspond. The medallions are filled with bouquets of flowers, designed and executed with exquisite taste. The entire piece weighs upward of a ton, and its value is between $450 and $500 sterling—$2400.

A NORTH-WEST PASSAGE DISCOVERED.

We learn from The London Globe, that "dispatches have been received at the Admiralty from Commander McClure, who sailed in Dec. 1849, in search of Sir John Franklin, in H. M. S. Investigator, and from Capt. Kellett, who sailed in the spring of 1850, in H. M. S. Resolute, on the same mission. We regret to say that no traces toward success in the main object of their mission have been discovered; but we have been favored with communication of a letter from Commander McClure, dated H. M. S. Investigator, Bay of Mercy, Barrow's Island, April, 1853, which announces his success in accomplishing the long problematical enterprise of the North-Western Passage. The gallant writer states that during the winter of 1850 his vessel wintered in pack, without sustaining any damage (and, surprising to say, he has to report the same result at the end of the third winter, and without the loss of a single man or horse) in the frozen waters called Prince of Wales Strait, and communicating with Barrow's, as he ascertained on Oct. 30, of that year. In July, 1851, he states: 'Such a body of ice came upon us with a strong east wind, and set the vessel so far to the south, that we determined to attempt a passage by the east end of the cliffs of Banks Land, forming the north entrance of the large island under which we now are.' The difficulties and dangers of this passage may be estimated from his statement that the ice does not measure from forty-five to seventy feet beneath the water, and only six or seven above. It is interesting to learn that inhabitants have been discovered further northward than known previously, at Wollaston and Victoria Land, and northward still on the tract designated as Prince Albert's Land. These were found exceedingly kind and friendly, and great quantities of copper were found, apparently in a very pure state. This metal is used by the natives for edging their weapons, &c., but they appeared to be ignorant of its value. In April, 1852, Commander McClure went to Melville Island on sledges, expecting to find three or four of Captain Austin's vessels, or, at all events, a store of provisions; but was disappointed to find only a notice left by Lieutenant McClintock, saying where provisions were, and giving the position of their ships. It was inferred that the search was supposed to be abandoned, and no other vessel expected to have come thus far. Since October, 1851, the crew of the Investigator is stated to have been put on two-thirds allowance—half a pound of meat per diem in a climate where their commander states they could readily have consumed four. On the hills adjacent to the bay from which the letter is dated, large numbers of deer and other game have been found, which must have contributed a welcome relief from the shortness of the previous polar journey. The only portion of Captain Kellett's letters with which we are, as yet, made acquainted, is the brief notice dated Melville Island, 7th May, that McClure had joined about a fortnight, all well, but half-starved. From Capt. McClure's own letters it appears that he had already detached some of his crew to return home by Ruffin's Bay, and a small party by the Mackenzie."

The question whether all the railway employees in England should wear beards, is discussed on sanitary grounds. Some did recommend it as a preventive against cholera, in a letter signed by guards, inspectors, engineers and firemen. In France, the railway employees wear beards as a protection against cholera. In Russia, the beard is the great protection of the male inhabitants against severe weather. It is considered an ordination of nature.

The market for wool is very dull every where, and appears to be gradually growing more and more depressed. Prices are generally five to eight cents lower than when the clip was first brought into market. The fear that this decline will continue is so great, that large holders are offering it at reduced prices on long time.

The steamer Keystone State, of the Denmark and Detroit line, collapsed her fun on Saturday on the Detroit River—badly, though not dangerously, sending two firemen.

SUMMARY.

Oct. 26th, a man about 40 years of age, named Frederick J. Fuller, who, for the last five months, has occupied a back basement at No. 219 First-st., New York, was found sitting in his room, in front of the window, dead. Coroner Gamble held an inquest upon the body, when evidence was adduced showing that the deceased had been very secluded in his habits, and had not been seen by any person in the house since the previous Tuesday. The body was examined by Dr. Higgins, who gave it as his opinion, that death was caused by want of suitable nourishment, and the jury rendered a verdict to that effect. On searching the person of the deceased, $20, mostly in three cent pieces, were found in his pockets; and a bank book, showing deposits in his favor to upward of $23.80, was found in his trunk.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of Oct. 24, says that in Clayton County, Iowa, an immense lead mine was lately discovered by Messrs. Holmes and Dickinson, who have taken out 150,000 lbs. of mineral within the last four weeks, and have another 100,000 in sight. The lead is considered good for 1,000,000 lbs. It is said to be found on the surface of the upper strata of magnesian limestone, and about eight feet below the surface of the earth, at the highest point of the ridge running out and west, and directly across the ridge. The mineral is said to be of the best quality, bringing at this time $21 per thousand pounds.

We yesterday saw (says the Tribune of Oct. 21) a striking illustration of mechanical ingenuity in the case of Mr. J. M. Stamford, of Medway, Mass. Mr. S. has both legs by an accident some two or three years ago, one being amputated above and the other below the knee, and has since had their place supplied by artificial limbs, made by Palmer & Co., of Springfield. With these he is able to walk perfectly well, either forward or backward, and without crutch or stick, though in going about the street he generally uses an ordinary cane. He goes up or down, gets into a carriage, or takes a long walk, without difficulty, and no one from his appearance would suppose his limbs to be artificial.

A dispatch dated Detroit, Wednesday, Oct. 19, 1853, says: An alarming fire has been prevailing of late in the woods and swamps, and has now reached within a mile of this city. 10,000 acres of swamp have been completely burned over, destroying all houses, barns, fences, &c., in its course. The woods are burning on the Southern Railroad between Toledo and Adrian, and on the Central Railroad near Dearborn. On the Pontiac Railroad it is raging so that the falling trees obstruct the passage of the trains. The city is so full of smoke that it is impossible to see across the streets. The fire is spreading toward Ann Arbor, destroying much valuable timber and property.

The Providence Post says: About three weeks ago, the wife of Mr. Henry Colvin, of Coventry, rose in the morning, complaining of a pain in her side. She soon after fell asleep, or died, as supposed. When her friends came to attend the funeral, they were struck with the remarkably lifelike appearance of the corpse, and the funeral was deferred. Since then, she has laid in the same condition, and many have visited Mr. Colvin's house, none of whom can discover any signs of decay. There had been no alteration on Friday, 21st, a period of about three weeks.

At Milwaukee, during Sunday night, Oct. 16, five alarms of fire were sounded—three of them false, supposed to be got up to weary the firemen—but the other two arose from configurations, the last of which occurred at a warehouse on High's Pier, which was filled with flour, beef, and merchandise, almost all of which was destroyed. The loss is estimated at nearly $50,000. Among the property destroyed were 4,000 barrels of flour, $2,000 worth of butter, and a large quantity of beef, pork and apples. It was the work of an incendiary, and a reward of $1,000 is offered by the Mayor for his apprehension.

An attempt has been made on the New York and New Haven Railroad to substitute coke for wood, as fuel for locomotives. It was found impossible to generate steam with sufficient rapidity by means of coke, causing the train to get "behind time," and wood is now used as before. However, this result is not considered altogether decisive, as the firemen were ignorant of the proper mode of using the coke, and the trial will probably be repeated. Coke is used almost exclusively in England; and anthracite, on some of the roads in Pennsylvania, with success.

A gentleman brought an action recently in one of the Ohio courts, against the owners of a steamboat on which he had lost a trunk containing $2,000. The court held that they were bound to pay for the loss of ordinary baggage, but not for anything of unusual value, unless made known to them beforehand, so that they could take extra care, and charge an extra price for carrying it. Accordingly the jury brought in a verdict allowing him $300—the value of the trunk and the clothing in it—but disallowing the $2,000.

The Rock Island Advertiser gives the following warning: "We were shown, on Monday last, by the teller of the Rock Island Bank, three notes of the denomination of $50, altered, in a truly beautiful and scientific manner, from $2's; also, one of the denomination of $10, altered from a $2. There are, in addition to these, he informed us, $10's altered from $1's, in circulation. All that is necessary to remember about the notes of this Bank, to prevent being deceived by these alterations, is, that no bill of a higher denomination than $5's are issued by it."

The Directors of the Utica and Binghamton Railroad have issued a notice announcing their determination to take no immediate steps toward the construction of that Road. They declare that when $300,000 shall have been subscribed they will put an Engineer upon the route and commence the grading of the road. They express great confidence in the feasibility, &c., of the project, but think the present subscriptions do not warrant the taking of active steps.

The market for wool is very dull every where, and appears to be gradually growing more and more depressed. Prices are generally five to eight cents lower than when the clip was first brought into market. The fear that this decline will continue is so great, that large holders are offering it at reduced prices on long time.

The steamer Keystone State, of the Denmark and Detroit line, collapsed her fun on Saturday on the Detroit River—badly, though not dangerously, sending two firemen.

The Reformer, published in Trenton, N. J., says that the same Maine Law which was presented last year to the Legislature of New Jersey—with a petition signed by 60,000 persons—and defeated by traitors, will be presented to the Legislature at its next session, with a providential chance to submit it in a constitutional form to the vote of the people at a special election.

There is to be erected a noble monument to the memory of Henry Clay, in Kentucky, the State of his home and adoption. Two citizens of Ohio have each given $1,000; and in Fayette county, (his late residence,) $15,000 have been raised. Franklin and Bourbon counties have each subscribed about $5,000, and other counties in the State in proportion.

The catalogue of Harvard College, just issued by John Bartlett, Cambridge, gives an aggregate of that institution of 700 students, of whom 329 are undergraduates, and 371 professional students and resident graduates. The officers of instruction and government comprise 44 persons, actually engaged in College duties. The expenses of an undergraduate for a year, included in the College bills, amount to $224.

The earnings of the Milwaukee and Mississippi railroad for the year ending August, 1853, were $138,923. Expenses, $59,445. Net earnings, $79,478. The earnings since August show an increase of more than 100 per cent.

The Annual Address before the American Institute was delivered at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Fifth-day evening, Oct. 20, by Hon. Wm. H. Seward. Subject: "The true Basis of American Independence."

In New York, last week, a man named Gilmore obtained a verdict of $5000 against the Hudson River Railroad Company, for injury sustained by a collision of trains.

The number of admissions to the Crystal Palace on Saturday, Oct. 8, was sixteen thousand and six hundred and forty-five, of which 17,325 were single admissions.

The Erie Railroad, with its equipments, cost twenty-five millions of dollars and employs two hundred locomotives.

Of the twelve hundred prisoners on Blackwell's Island, only three hundred and nineteen are Americans.

A man named Affler, residing in New York, last week poisoned his wife and then himself, making a clean sweep of the family.

Miss Clarke, better known as "Gracie Greenwood," was married in Philadelphia, a few days ago, to a gentleman named Lippincott.

Nelson Pellet, editor of the Chesapeake Telegraph, died at Norwich, N. Y., on Sunday evening, Oct. 16th, of bilious fever.

NEW YORK MARKET—October 26, 1853.

Wheat—No. 1 43 1/2 to 44 1/2; No. 2 42 1/2 to 43 1/2; No. 3 41 1/2 to 42 1/2; No. 4 40 1/2 to 41 1/2; No. 5 39 1/2 to 40 1/2; No. 6 38 1/2 to 39 1/2; No. 7 37 1/2 to 38 1/2; No. 8 36 1/2 to 37 1/2; No. 9 35 1/2 to 36 1/2; No. 10 34 1/2 to 35 1/2; No. 11 33 1/2 to 34 1/2; No. 12 32 1/2 to 33 1/2; No. 13 31 1/2 to 32 1/2; No. 14 30 1/2 to 31 1/2; No. 15 29 1/2 to 30 1/2; No. 16 28 1/2 to 29 1/2; No. 17 27 1/2 to 28 1/2; No. 18 26 1/2 to 27 1/2; No. 19 25 1/2 to 26 1/2; No. 20 24 1/2 to 25 1/2; No. 21 23 1/2 to 24 1/2; No. 22 22 1/2 to 23 1/2; No. 23 21 1/2 to 22 1/2; No. 24 20 1/2 to 21 1/2; No. 25 19 1/2 to 20 1/2; No. 26 18 1/2 to 19 1/2; No. 27 17 1/2 to 18 1/2; No. 28 16 1/2 to 17 1/2; No. 29 15 1/2 to 16 1/2; No. 30 14 1/2 to 15 1/2; No. 31 13 1/2 to 14 1/2; No. 32 12 1/2 to 13 1/2; No. 33 11 1/2 to 12 1/2; No. 34 10 1/2 to 11 1/2; No. 35 9 1/2 to 10 1/2; No. 36 8 1/2 to 9 1/2; No. 37 7 1/2 to 8 1/2; No. 38 6 1/2 to 7 1/2; No. 39 5 1/2 to 6 1/2; No. 40 4 1/2 to 5 1/2; No. 41 3 1/2 to 4 1/2; No. 42 2 1/2 to 3 1/2; No. 43 1 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 44 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 45 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 46 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 47 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 48 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 49 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 50 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 51 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 52 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 53 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 54 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 55 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 56 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 57 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 58 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 59 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 60 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 61 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 62 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 63 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 64 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 65 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 66 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 67 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 68 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 69 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 70 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 71 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 72 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 73 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 74 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 75 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 76 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 77 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 78 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 79 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 80 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 81 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 82 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 83 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 84 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 85 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 86 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 87 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 88 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 89 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 90 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 91 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 92 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 93 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 94 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 95 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 96 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 97 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 98 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 99 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 100 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 101 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 102 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 103 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 104 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 105 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 106 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 107 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 108 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 109 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 110 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 111 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 112 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 113 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 114 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 115 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 116 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 117 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 118 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 119 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 120 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 121 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 122 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 123 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 124 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 125 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 126 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 127 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 128 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 129 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 130 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 131 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 132 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 133 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 134 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 135 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 136 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 137 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 138 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 139 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 140 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 141 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 142 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 143 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 144 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 145 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 146 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 147 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 148 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 149 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 150 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 151 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 152 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 153 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 154 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 155 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 156 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 157 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 158 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 159 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 160 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 161 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 162 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 163 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 164 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 165 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 166 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 167 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 168 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 169 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 170 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 171 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 172 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 173 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 174 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 175 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 176 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 177 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 178 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 179 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 180 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 181 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 182 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 183 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 184 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 185 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 186 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 187 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 188 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 189 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 190 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 191 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 192 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 193 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 194 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 195 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 196 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 197 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 198 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 199 1/2 to 1 1/2; No. 200 1/2 to 1 1/

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 2, 1853.

THE THEATER—UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Whether we shall succeed in saying any thing on this subject which will appear like sound doctrine to those who read, we do not know. Certainly, we have no wish to enter a caveat against unbecomings of every description, thereby implying such austerities of character as is more fitting a funeral than the ordinary condition of society. There is "a time to laugh," and when that time is present, we do not want to be friends, young or old, to wear sad and morose faces.

But we go to those who fear God, whether they go to seek their amusement in the vestibule of hell! In plain, unmistakable English, has a Christian any right to attend the theater? And in English just as plain and unmistakable, we answer, No. For, in the first place, he cannot go there without giving entrance to the dram-shop and the bawling, one or both of these abominations being connected with every theater in the land. And in the second place, he has no business to hire others to do for him that which he could not, conscientiously, and as a Christian, do himself. Lay thy hand upon thy plow, Christian, and say whether the business of playing on the stage is a business which thou could conscientiously follow, and feel that in so doing you were glorifying God.

Now, if a play is a business which the Christian cannot, and ought not, to follow, we must not have any right to hire others to do for him that which he could not, conscientiously, and as a Christian, do himself. Lay thy hand upon thy plow, Christian, and say whether the business of playing on the stage is a business which thou could conscientiously follow, and feel that in so doing you were glorifying God.

But a play is a business which the Christian cannot, and ought not, to follow, we must not have any right to hire others to do for him that which he could not, conscientiously, and as a Christian, do himself. Lay thy hand upon thy plow, Christian, and say whether the business of playing on the stage is a business which thou could conscientiously follow, and feel that in so doing you were glorifying God.

Now, we do not believe, that a person is any more strongly impressed with the abominations of the theater system from witnessing the drama of Uncle Tom, than he is from reading the book. Let the healthful moral tendency of the former be what it may, it cannot exceed that of the latter. On this ground, therefore, the performance is useless. Consequently, if we wish to witness it, go not for the sake of the moral sentiment which it imparts, but for some other reason.

Nor can it be pleaded, that the book does not excite the attention so as to convey to all classes of readers the sentiment it localizes. No work of fiction was ever more fascinating. Those who go to read it are unwilling to lay it aside, if they have finished it. We do not believe, that the drama can more powerfully rivet the attention, than does the simple tale as it is told in the book.

Neither can it be pretended, that there is some lack in the book—some failure to present the moral aspect of the question in its true light—which the drama makes up. No one has set up any such pretense, so far as we are informed. (Typo is nothing original in the drama; it is in the book in a dramatic dress.)

Why, then, do people go to witness it? Simply because they love the excitement of a theater; there is no other reason. And when we hear of Christians going to such a place, we are compelled to believe that their talk about the moral influence of the play, which they always so fully extenuate of their conduct, is but a mere excuse to cover up their fondness for theatrical excitement. We fear that they are such Christians as have habitually cherished a longing after such things, and are only glad that there is now a way open for them to gratify that longing to some extent, without too much outraging the moral sense of community. They may be disposed to repel this charge, if they would, but we are satisfied that if they will enter into a searching examination of their own hearts, they will see that such is the real motive which prompts them—a fondness for theatrical entertainments in general.

We are not at all anxious as to what will be the result of this Christian theater going. Uncle Tom will have had its day, and something else of a pretended moral tendency will be got up. Christians will be induced to witness that also, and the same plea will be urged in justification. Those who desire to restrain their children from the theater, convinced that it is the highway to ruin—the very threshold of hell—will have to combat, not only the impossibilities of the children themselves, but the example of those Christians who thought it no harm to witness the performance of Uncle Tom. Already Christian parents are importuned, and their refusal is met with the plea, that there is no more evil in going to see Uncle Tom performed than there was in Elder B.'s going to the Bowery Theater to see the historical drama of "Putnam!" Verily, if Mrs. Stowe's book were justly responsible for such results, we could wish that it had never been written. T. A. A.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

LONDON, OCTOBER 28, 1853.

The telegraphic announcement, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, intimates the continued success of the Chinese patriots. Peking is expected soon to fall, and with it the present dynasty. The intelligence from Turkey all seems more and more to imply that war is, in human estimation, inevitable. And if once commenced, when war is to end, the most skillful politicians confess themselves incapable of judging. With the word of God in our hands, and seeking to take heed to its sure word of prophecy, we fear that we are on the eve of "the greatest tribulation that ever was or shall be." War, famine, pestilence, and evil beasts, are God's four sore judgments, with which he threatens to smite himself upon the anagorid. Famine seemed for a time even now to threaten; and while war is imminent, pestilence, having been so fully fatal in other lands, is now in this country, and is creating so small apprehension, but is doing little to lead men to God. He is however crying, "Fear God, and give Him glory, for the hour of His judgments is come."

But with all the solemn awe which such prospects inspire, we are not without hope that these very judgments may lead many to feel more of the solemn reality that there is in the position which as Christians we occupy. Profession of the truth is made such an easy thing—comes so little in conflict with the world—yields so much to the world, and is in turn dealt liberally with by the world—that the light is little distinguishable from the darkness. God's ordinances are so little regarded, even by those in whom the fear of the Lord has really a place, that we may well wonder at the forbearing mercy of the Lord. When, however, the earthquake and pestilence and fearful signs from heaven proclaim the displeasure of a righteous God, we may hope the Church will lay more to heart the calling with which she is invested as the depository of divine truth, and the instrument for making it known in all its integrity to the ends of the earth. J. A. BEGG.

AGRICULTURE IN PALESTINE.

Mr. T. B. Stillman has handed us a letter from Mrs. C. S. Minor in Palestine to her son in this country, from which we copy a few paragraphs. The letter acknowledges the receipt of several boxes of clothing, tools, &c., one of which was "from Sabbath friends in New York and New England." Mrs. M. says:

Our prospects for usefulness are now peculiarly encouraging. The disposition of the Jews generally, in Jerusalem and Jafa, is most friendly, to us and our object. Our late persecutions and trials have proved to them our disinterested regard to them, and has excited their sympathy in our favor. Our laborers reside with us, having rooms in our house. They are industrious and diligent, and much encouraged in their work by the taste of the first fruits of their labors recently gathered. They have many visitors, and delight in expressing their satisfaction to their brethren. Our largest house, with large rooms and wide terraces, without one pane of glass in its 33 windows, is often full of Jews, who come and go, with their oriental manners and costume, in the kindest social harmony, without yet giving the first cause of offense, with letters and mothers and children of three generations. Freedom and protection in the country are new things to them, and they esteem our friendship and neighborhood as a great blessing. There is but one congregation in Jafa, of 70 families, superintended by a chief Rabbi, who acts as father and Judge of them all. He has resided here 20 years and is much esteemed by Turks and Christians. He visits us often, owns a garden, and is much interested in cultivation, and seeks to assist us in every way in his power. He has a large family, who, on account of the illness of his youngest child, and the present heat in town, have spent some time with us. You would have been pleased if you could have seen them, ten in number, sitting the first Sabbath eve around their extra evening meal—the Sabbath lamp hanging from the loaded vine branches above, they rested on mats on our highest terrace, overlooking the surrounding forest of orange and oriental fruits, and the blue sea spreading beyond, westward, with its solemn, ceaseless moan. At such moments I often think of you, my devoted child, and how much you have suffered in Antas, and how much you have sacrificed for this work, but now absent, and unable to witness what the love and grace of God have done in moving the hearts of this people so kindly towards us.

"The President of the Jews," as he is commonly called here, and all his family, seem much attached to us, and have offered rooms in their house in town for a school, and he desires that his people should engage generally in agriculture! What an opening for Christian love and sacrifice! The harvest truly is white, but where are the laborers, and the necessary means which the American Christian Church could so easily supply? Oh that God would arouse his people to feel for this long degraded, oppressed race, whose debtors they are. When shall our waiting hearts rejoice in such an hour! The best of land is for sale or lease all around us at a very low rate. Many Jews appeal for employment, but our poverty keeps us in narrow limits. Even the needful daily hospitality to the hungry visitor requires many brown leaves, and with the most severe economy, expenses increase with the increase of interest and sympathy in our work around us. Americans, I believe, have never resided in Jafa, and we have many calls from the Turks, Arabs, and Christians—from the Cads, the principal Turk, the Pasha's Agent, and chief Sheikh, down to the poor village Arab miles distant, who kisses the floor, begging

Frank medicine for his sore eyes. So far we have found general favor in their sight, which is of the Lord's mercy, for we have no presents like our English neighbors to give to the great.

Our little farm is also often visited, and elicits much commendation. The American plants (Indian corn and sweet potatoes) now look very fine, and attract the most attention, while the young trees, bending with their various beautiful fruits, make it like a little Paradise. We commence work very early, rest through the middle of the day, and continue till after sunset. We are all at present in excellent health, delighted with our work, and constantly employed. Several excellent German families live near us, whose love for and object in coming to this land, is much the same as our own. They unite in social worship with us, and we have recently enjoyed much of the Divine blessing. They are humble and industrious, and seek to advance our work. We expect this fall that we shall be able to put in a good crop of wheat, which will be a great help in the article of bread. Our summer vegetables must be watered, but potatoes, beets, cabbage, cauliflower, &c., grow well in the autumn, winter and spring, without. Water in abundance is obtained here at a short depth from the surface, and is calked into reservoirs by very clumsy machinery, an Arab invention, expensive and tedious. If we had good chain pumps to introduce here, it would be a great improvement, and be one of the best means of extending agriculture.

OUR PALESTINE MISSION.

Brother Wm. M. Jones and wife, with Bro. Charles Saunders and wife, have been appointed by the Missionary Board to conduct the Seventh-day Baptist Mission in Palestine, and by a resolution of the Board are directed to proceed to the field of their labors as soon as practicable. It is therefore probable, that they will sail by the first vessel, say in a month or six weeks from this time. A Committee to attend to their outfit was appointed, consisting of A. D. Tinsworth, of Plainfield, N. J., H. H. Baker, of New Market, N. J., and T. B. Stillman, of New York. They will therefore attend to the procuring of stores, tools, clothing, &c., for the Mission. The friends of the Mission, who wish to contribute articles of clothing, agricultural implements, tools, seeds, &c., are requested to inform either of the members of the Committee, that arrangements may be made to forward them to their destination at the earliest period.

The following resolution of the Board was passed at the meeting held Oct. 27th:—

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board, that Bro. Charles Saunders and family proceed to Palestine, if practicable, with Bro. Jones, and that his duties be especially to take charge of the Agricultural or Industrial Department, and also, with Bro. Jones, to have charge of the finances, and to cooperate with him in all the practical duties which the Mission contemplate.

It will by this be seen, that the division of labor to which Bro. Saunders is devoted is all which will place him as a position well calculated to represent the private members of our American Churches. Our brethren who are acquainted with brother or sister Saunders will feel gratified with their appointment, and will doubtless engage with alacrity in the needful exertions to procure the proper outfit.

THE OHIO ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association convened, according to adjournment, with the Church in Jackson, on Fifth-day, October 6, 1853, at 10 o'clock A. M.

In the absence of the person appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse, Elder Thomas E. Babcock performed that duty, preaching from Luke 18: 32.

After sermon, the Association was called to order by the Secretary, the Moderator not being present. A committee was appointed to nominate Officers, and the Association then adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock P. M.

Met pursuant to adjournment. After prayer, the committee on nominations made their report, which was received and adopted as follows:—CALVIN DAVIS, Moderator; BENJAMIN CLEMENT and JOHN P. FORSYTH, Secretaries.

The Letters from the Churches were then called for and presented, from which the following statistics were taken.

Joseph—Samuel Babcock, Pastor; Marston Babcock and Benjamin Clement, Licentiates; John Forsyth and J. P. Babcock, Deacons; J. G. Maxon, Clerk. Added 25, decreased 1, total 24.

Shelby—William Parson, Deacon; Job Kennedy, Clerk. Added 4, total 10.

Communications from other bodies were then called for, and Elder T. E. Babcock presented the Minutes of the late Anniversary of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association, from which he read the Corresponding Letter and the Report of the Executive Board, and gave a summary view of the missionary labors of that body, together with the present prospects of the work. He also read the resolution by which he was appointed a delegate to this Association. Whereupon, it was resolved, that he be welcomed to a seat.

The Standing Committees were then appointed; after which the Association adjourned to meet on Sixth-day morning, at 9 o'clock.

Met according to adjournment. Annual Reports being called for, the Executive Committee made their report, which was received and adopted; from which the fact is taken, that Elder Joshua Hill has been laboring under their direction in the bounds of the Association since the 1st of July.

Reports of Standing Committees being called for, the Committee on the State of Religion reported in follows, which was received and adopted:—

Your Committee, after an examination of the letters from the Churches, feel gratified to find so good a state of feeling existing among us. It will undoubtedly be gratifying to all to learn, that instead of strife, discord and contention, invading our borders, the Spirit of God has been in our midst, and the dark clouds which have seemed to hover over us have been dispelled, backsliders have been reclaimed, sinners have been converted, and the churches built up. Though the churches have labored for some time past under a series of difficulties truly embarrassing, and clouds of darkness threatening impending ruin appeared gathering in the horizon, and many seemed to feel that the Lord had almost forsaken us, yet, when sufficiently humbled, the Lord was gracious; the sun of righteousness arose with healing on his wings; those perishing clouds were dispersed, our prayers were heard and answered, and many were enabled to say, Blessed be the name of the Lord. Yet we feel that there is still great need of a deeper work of grace, of prayer, and watchfulness; in short, there is still a want of vital piety and of zealous devotedness on the part of the older members of the churches. Holiness and true piety are the standard set up by our Saviour, and nothing short of this will satisfy the soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Let us continue to press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The Committee on Resolutions reported, which report was received, and made the business of the afternoon session.

On motion, it was voted, that when we do adjourn, we adjourn to meet with the church in Jackson, on Fifth-day before the second Sabbath in October, 1854, at 10 o'clock; that brother Clement be appointed to preach the opening discourse, and Elder Hill alternate.

In the afternoon, the Report of the Committee on Resolutions was taken up, discussed, and adopted, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, in our opinion, holds a very important place among the interests of the denomination, and that we commend its publications to the confidence of the people of this Association, and earnestly recommended that so far as practicable they be brought into every family.

2. Whereas, the great evils of Slavery, Intemperance, and War, continue to exert their demoralizing and destructive influence throughout our land and the world, directly confronting every enterprise that looks to the elevation of the standard of piety, and the melioration of the condition of the human family—therefore, Resolved, That we deem it the duty of every Christian, not only to withhold all support from these evils, but to stand up uncompromisingly against them, and in all reasonable ways to exert an influence for their overthrow.

3. Whereas, in our judgment, the swearing prohibited in the New Testament includes judicial oaths—therefore, Resolved, That we recommend to all Christians, in testifying before Courts, or otherwise, to avail themselves of the alternative almost everywhere offered to make a simple affirmation.

4. Resolved, That we feel urged to take higher ground with regard to Missionary Effort in this region of country, and that among the glorious results of an enlarged and more vigorous work, we look not least to an increase of ability to contribute in every thing that can be rendered available to the work of missions in the foreign field.

Brother Maxon Babcock was appointed a delegate to the Virginia Association, and Benjamin Clement to the Western Association.

E. P. Stout was appointed Corresponding Secretary for the ensuing year.

Corresponding Letter.

The Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association, to the sister Associations and Churches in Christ.

DEAR BRETHREN,—We find ourselves under renewed obligations to our Heavenly Father for the rich blessing of his providence and grace which we have enjoyed during the past year; and especially that he has favored us with another opportunity of convening together to devise ways and means for the furtherance of Christ's kingdom. Our anniversary has been blessed with the presence of the great Head of the Church, and our deliberations have been of the most comfortable and encouraging character, and the brethren, in looking over our isolated position, the paucity of our numbers, and the poverty of our means, evinced a disposition to enter more vigorously into the missionary work, consecrating themselves anew to the cause of Christ. Eld. Thomas E. Babcock was with us as a delegate from the Western Association, and we have enjoyed his labors as a minister for several days, which labors have been blessed to our good in the reclaiming of backsliders, the conversion of our sons and daughters who were far from God, and the encouragement of the people of God; for which we desire to express our gratitude to the brethren of that Association, and pray that our Heavenly Father may abundantly bless them in their labors of love, and that the same spirit of friendly regard may always exist, not only between the Ohio and Western Associations, but between all our dear brethren who keep the commandments of God and the faith of the gospel. We have much to oppose us in our endeavors to spread God's truth among men, and humbly beg your sympathy and prayers.

The Secretaries were instructed to revise the minutes, forward them to the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder, and request their publication. CALVIN DAVIS, Moderator.

BENJAMIN CLEMENT, Secretaries.

J. P. FORSYTH.

ACCIDENTS LAST SABBATH.—Among the accidents in the vicinity of New York last Sabbath (Saturday) we have to notice, that an express train on the Hudson River Railroad ran off the track near Yorkers, smashing one locomotive and several cars, killing two horses, and wounding one man. A man was run over by the Third-avenue Railroad cars, and so injured that he died at the Hospital. A carman, named Park, Cudmore, accidentally backed his horse and cart into the dock at the foot of Nineteenth-st., N. Y., and both himself and horse were drowned. A painter, named John Dooley, was instantly killed by falling from a swinging scaffold on which he was at work at the corner of Broadway and Tenth-st., N. Y. Mr. Butler, Chief Engineer on board the steamer Merila, coming into the port of New York, was killed by the bursting of a cannon which he was firing for a pilot.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The cheering fact has already been announced, that the Sandwich Islands are now Christianized—that the foreign missionary work there has been accomplished—and that henceforth all that is done for them is to be done as for a Christian people in need of help, just as the Wincomit, Iowa, or Oregon. The Annual Report of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, accompanying the above announcement with the following suggestions:—

As long as it shall be desirable to sustain foreign pastors at the Islands, it will probably be necessary for the churches of this country to aid more or less in their support. The cost of building churches has been borne by the natives from the beginning. They have also assumed the support of the common schools, and of the native seminary or college at Lahaina. The government appropriates for the Department of Public Instruction for the year commencing April 1st, was $47,735. It may be added, that the appropriation for the Department of Law and Justice, was $33,522; and $10,000 were appropriated for prisons on the Island of Oahu, where is the principal airport town, and $10,000 for the public health.

Of churches on the Islands there are 26, with 23,236 members in regular standing; 1,644 of whom were admitted the past year. More than 524,000 were contributed by sixteen of these churches for the repair of houses of worship, the support of their pastors, and for various benevolent objects. The Auxiliary Hawaiian Missionary Society, following the course of things, has become an independent society, and has sent a mission of its own to the Marquesas, for which it chartered a vessel, and for the support of which, as the agent of the Island churches, it is wholly responsible. This mission is entirely native, and two of its four missionaries were from among the native pastors just mentioned, who cheerfully offered themselves for the service. The other two were deacons in the churches.

What has this intellectual, moral, religious, social creation of the Hawaiian nation cost the good people of the United States? The Board has expended $817,333; the Bible Society, $41,560; and the Trust Society, $23,900. The total is $882,653. It is considerably less than a million. The Exploring Expedition sent by the United States into those seas, cost more than this. It costs more to build a line-of-battle ship and keep it in service one year. And what contributor to this enterprise is poorer or less happy for what he has done for this peaceful conquest, this glorious extension of the Redeemer's reign!

ANTIOCH COLLEGE.

The following history of Antioch College, which we abridge from The Christianian Cincinnatian, will be read with interest by many of our readers.

The Institution was opened on October 5, by the inauguration of the Hon. Horace Mann, late member of Congress from Massachusetts, as President. It is founded at Yellow Springs, Greene County, Ohio, by the "Christianian Connection," a body numbering about seven hundred Churches in the United States. It is their great denominational University, and will receive the patronage of the whole body, from Maine to California. It is called Antioch, because it was at that city in Syria that the disciples of Jesus were first called Christians.

The funds of this College have been raised in small sums, principally in scholarships of one hundred dollars each, of which more than one thousand have been taken up, making a foundation in that respect alone of more than one hundred thousand dollars to begin with. The interest of this money will legally be ten per cent, making a sum of more than ten thousand dollars annual income to pay the professors and teachers.

Each person who has given a scholarship is entitled to keep a scholar there till the end of time; thus, virtually, a tuition of ten dollars a year is paid on the scholar he sends to Antioch. Many of the scholarships will not, however, be used. The tuition for scholars who do not have the privilege of a scholarship, is twenty-four dollars annually. Judge Wm. Mills, of Yellow Springs, gave twenty acres of land to the Institution, as a site for the buildings, and contributed several thousand dollars in money. The funds generally are in a healthy and hopeful condition, and they will no doubt be materially and constantly increased. The largest amount was raised in Ohio, the next in New York, and then Pennsylvania, Virginia, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, &c.

The Institution is entirely liberal in religion. The students will be carefully taught and cared for in their moral and religious character, but they will be permitted to attend that church which they or their parents may prefer.

The college buildings at present erected stand on a beautiful and commanding slope, west of the ravine of the Springs, and within a quarter of a mile of the Mad River Railroad, midway between Xenia and Springfield, ninety miles from Cincinnati. Those nearly completed consist of one large central edifice, in the form of a cross, 170 feet long, and 110 feet wide, three stories high, of about 18 feet each, and a high basement story; and two halls for dormitories, 160 feet long each, 39 feet wide, and four stories high, besides the basement. The chief building is adorned with lofty towers, and is truly a majestic pile of architecture. It is designed for the chapel, library, lecture and recitation rooms, laboratory, cabinet, &c. The three buildings stand on three sides of an oblong square, and are to be connected by arcades. Two other halls for dormitories are to be built as soon as possible, in a similar style and size, and ranging parallel to the first ones, at a suitable distance. The patron and founders of Antioch College also have an Observatory and Botanical Garden in prospect, which, if realized, means can produce it, they intend shall be the very best in America. The climate of Ohio is admirably fitted for such a garden, lying, as it does, on the confines of both the temperate and the tropical and temperate zones.

A large concourse assembled to dedicate this noble and hopeful institution. Among the audience were 300 students of both sexes, who came to enter the institution, which consists of two parts, a preparatory school and a college. No person under twelve years of age will be admitted to the preparatory school. Both sexes are admissible, both to the faculty and to students.

Antioch College was incorporated in 1852. The annual commencement will take place on the Wednesday next preceding the Fourth of July, to be followed by a vacation of ten weeks with short vacations of one and two weeks.

The American Board.—From reports of the recent meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, we glean the following interesting statistics:—

The receipts for the year ending July 31st, were, from all sources, including the balance of $5 35 in the Treasurer's hands, $314,522.22. Of this sum, $305,055.58 were donations and legacies. The remaining $9,466.64 were interest on permanent funds, earnings of the mission press, &c. The expenditures during the same period were $316,607.59, leaving a balance in the treasury, August 1, 1853, of $4,300.64.

Since the last annual meeting, 43 missionary laborers, 16 males and 27 females, have been sent to different fields under the care of the Board. To the Armenians, 14; Choctaws, 11; Cherokees, 2; Ceylon, 4; Fuh-chai, 2; Angria, 3; Syria, 3; Almodingger, 2; Arcot, 2. In addition to these, 16 other missionary laborers, male and female, having spent some time in this country, have returned to fields previously occupied by them. Thus making a grand total of 89-six missionaries and assistant missionaries sent out during the year. This is the largest number, with a single exception, ever sent into the missionary field by this Board in one year.

Eight young men are now under appointment in this country as missionaries, and five persons as assistant missionaries.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

This free-mission organization held its annual meeting recently at Worcester, Mass. From the report of this Treasurer, it appears that the receipts during the year were $41,692, being a large increase over those of the previous year. The expenditures were $49,307. The Annual Report states that the Association has missions in Africa, Jamaica, Siam, Canada, California, among the Ojibwa Indians, and in the home field. During the past year, a missionary company of ten has been added to the African mission, two ministers and their wives to the Siam mission, twenty-one to the list of Home Missions, a new station established among the Indians at Pembina, and a mission to the Coeur-d'Alene. The demand upon the Society for Home Missions is rapidly increasing.

ROMAN CATHOLIC "CONSECRATION."

The ceremony of "consecrating" the three clergymen lately elected Bishops of the Roman Catholic dioceses of Brooklyn, N. Y., Newark, N. J., and Burlington, Vt., took place at the Cathedral in New York on Sunday last, and was witnessed by such a vast number of people that the display of clerical attire, the imposition of hands (the essential rite, the power of the Episcopacy is communicated), the delivery of the emblems of pastoral authority to the new Bishops, the solemn chanting by the choir in the chancel, and the sacred music of the chorus, together with the other ceremonies of the occasion, are represented as having been very imposing.

THE FREEMAN BAPTIST QUARTERLY.

This work completed its first volume with the October number. The publishers accompany the number with the following notice of the success of the enterprise:—

"Our Quarterly is an established fact. It has passed through the first year of its publication with more than the expected success. We began 'not faithless but believing' we expected difficulty and toil, and we had no idea of failure, and so made no provision for that—but our publication has sent back to us more of encouragement and promise than we had counted on. Our list of subscribers is longer than any of us predicted, and the amount on it is those that speak kindly and bid us go on. The public press has given us a right-hand of welcome that was warm and cordial, and we return our grateful thanks."

MISSIONARIES FOR PALESTINE.—The brick J. Winthrop, which sailed from Boston for Smyrna, Oct. 10th, took out as missionaries to "Palestine," Walter Dixon and family, of Groton, Mass., and Mr. Jones, of Stockbridge, Mass. Mr. Dixon is a farmer, and goes out on his own responsibility, taking with him a family of six adults. Mr. Jones is a farmer and mechanic, and goes out under the auspices of the Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, intending to labor for that people in connection with an agricultural school.

THE MEMORIAL.—The eighth number of the Seventh-day Baptist Memorial, (last No. of the second volume) will be issued in a few days. It will contain a portrait of Nathan Wardner; biographies of Nathan Wardner, John Davis of Squam, N. J., Jacob Davis, and Jonathan Davis of Tooton, N. J.; a constitution of the History of Seventh-day Baptist Missions; Seventh-day Baptist Annals; Societies of the Churches for 1853; List of Ministers, with their post-office address.

The first No. of the third volume of the Memorial will be issued in January, and contain a portrait and biographical sketch of James H. Cochran. All subscribers for the second volume will be considered as subscribers for the third, unless they notify us to the contrary before the first day of January.

The first and second volumes of the Memorial, bound separately or together, will be for sale soon. The price in paper will be $1 per volume; in cloth $1.50; in other styles according to the quality of binding.

The young men connected with the various M. E. Churches in the City of New York, are making extensive arrangements for a grand missionary demonstration, to be held on the afternoon and evening of the 28 of November, in Metropolitan Hall. Eminent speakers are being engaged for the occasion, and will no doubt excite much interest, both at home and abroad.

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the steamer Niagara we have European news to Oct. 15th.

The Sultan has announced, that if the Russian troops do not evacuate the Principalities within fifteen days, Turkey will consider it as a case of declared war, and will act accordingly, but will not set on fire the Danube. The proclamation of war is posted on all the mosques. The Sultan has invited the combined fleets up to Constantinople. The Black Sea is free to neutral flags.

Louis Napoleon is reported to have stated on the 15th inst., that unless Russia yields, war must be proceeded with.

The Paris Correspondent of The London Globe says: "Notwithstanding all that we hear of preparations for war, the impression here that peace will be preserved is very general. The number of offers of aid to the Turkish Government from Poles, Hungarians, &c., is almost incredible. These offers are not confined to the refugees in France, but have come from the United States—from Hungary, Poland and Italy."

The Emperor of Russia has authorized the free importation into any port of Finland of all the materials for equipping ships. This privilege to endure for 5 years.

The Paris Police have made a search for Komath in the house of M. Kic, a Hungarian. Komath, however, was not there.

A letter from Turin says the Piedmontese Government had refused to admit M. Foretti, a naturalized American, as Consul for the United States, alleging that he is a disciple of Mazzini.

Miss Cunningham was liberated from prison at Florence.

FROM PARIS LETTER.

The steamer Arctic, with four days later news, arrived at New York last Sunday afternoon.

The Eastern Question continues unchanged in its aspect. The Turkish Declaration of War is said to have been made known by Omar Pasha to the Russian Commander, in a brief and soldier-like letter, notifying him that on the 25th of October, at latest, the state of war would commence. The case, on his part, had declared that the war should be a war of extermination. Meanwhile the French and English negotiators think that their diplomacy will serve to confine the warfare to the Turkish frontiers, without extending to the rest of Europe. Austria and Prussia declare their neutrality in the coming struggle. Paskievich, the new Commander-in-Chief, has demanded to have 40,000 of the picked troops now in Poland placed under his special orders in the Principalities. It is difficult, in view of all the circumstances, to see how a general war of Europe can be prevented.

The discovery of the North-West Passage, by Commander McClure, is confirmed by his arrival. The Investigator entered the Frozen Sea from the Pacific by Behring's Straits, and came out by Davis's Straits. The immediate cause of the discovery does not appear, owing to the cold, desolate and inhospitable region passed through. The splendid heroism of the Commander and his men are not the less to be admired, because at this moment their discovery cannot be turned to practical account.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

Two weeks later news from California, and about three millions dollars in gold dust, was received last week. We give the most interesting items of news.

The late declaration on the part of a portion of the Americans and other foreign population in the Sandwich Islands, has created some interest at San Francisco, and there has been some talk of expeditions in that direction, but there will be none, at least not for some time.

A San Francisco paper says: Our domestic industry of every class is in a prosperous and satisfactory condition. The agricultural products of the country are very abundant, and the prevalent opinion among the farmers is, that California will raise enough grain next year for home consumption.

A suspension bridge over the San Joaquin has been completed.

The telegraph poles between San Francisco and San Jose have been erected, but the telegraph is not yet in operation. The telegraph from Sacramento to Nevada will be in operation on the 1st of December.

Several earthquakes were felt in the lower part of the San Joaquin Valley on the 23d of October.

The Indians at the head of Russian River have been troublesome, and the settlers in the neighborhood are talking of giving them a lesson.

The Rogue River Indians were induced to make peace on the 11th ult. They are to receive $50,000 for the land on the south side of the river.

There was a battle on the 12th ult., between the Applegate Indians and the rifle rangers. The latter lost one man, the former 12 or 14.

There have been several difficulties about land titles. In one case a man was killed.

The mines in Carson Valley are not profitable, and the settlers there are generally engaged in other occupations.

The Quartz mines in Grass Valley have lately been paying much better than formerly. Rich diggings have lately been found in Lake Valley on Johnson's Route, on the eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

Madame Pfeiffer, a lady of extraordinary energy and daring, who has made the tour of the world, arrived in San Francisco in the bark Seneca, from Batavia. She is perhaps the greatest traveler living, having traversed alone Asia Minor, Persia, Tartary, India, and penetrated into the unexplored depths of Malacca, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and other East India Islands. She has made her way through howling wildernesses, inhabited by savage beasts and men equally savage, with no fear or hesitation, and has always managed to extricate herself from the perils that beset her, by her address and courage.

The Alta California states that it has private advices from the Sandwich Islands, according to the information that an immense immigration thither of Russians, said to be 12,000 in number, is in preparation, under the immediate auspices of the Emperor.

BIBLE BURNING IN NEW-YORK.—Exaggerated and incorrect statements having been made in relation to a recent case of Bible-burning at the Five Points in New York, Mr. A. S. Sennelake, a witness of the whole transaction, gives the following reliable account of it:—

"I was standing at one of the windows of the school-room of the House of Industry, when my attention was suddenly attracted by observing a man, a prominent Catholic, take from the hands of a child a newly-bound book. A few moments' observation convinced me it was a Bible. He turned the leaves over, one of which he tore out; drawing from his pocket a match, he struck it upon the pavement, ignited the leaf, then the stump of a cigar in his mouth, which having done, he deliberately communicated the burning leaf to the Bible. While doing so, he attracted the notice of some ten or a dozen boys, to whom something was said which I did not overhear; the purpose, however, was soon but to appear—the burning Bible was thrown into the centre of the street, and the boys, who were immediately joined by the stragglers around, encouraged and incited by the bystanders—of whom probably there were fifty within a few feet—commenced the work of kicking it about, amidst curses, language the most blasphemous, obscene shouts of brutal laughter, and riotous conduct of the worst description."

"I hesitated a moment, lest on endeavoring to rescue it I should be treated in the same manner; it was but a moment, however; without my hat, I went down to the street. The Bible at this moment was kicked sending upon the steps of the mission room of the House of Industry; from thence it was sent into the gutter; I followed amidst the mob, and secured the book in front of Danally's coal yard, some twenty yards from the place where it was ignited; I said a few words, and amid hoots and shouts and curses retreated to the house, where I presented the charred remains, still smoking and filthy, to Mr. Pease, who was at the time seated with his family and several friends at supper. The Bible is still in his possession, and may be seen by any person who may desire it."

EPISCOPAL MATTERS.—The Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church recently closed a three weeks session in New York. From the reports of the daily papers, we gather the following items:—

The Introductory Discourse by Bishop McIlvaine stated that the Episcopal Church is unable to supply the demand for ministers for the rapidly growing towns and villages of the West.

Resolutions introduced by Rev. Dr. Scott, for augmenting the number of candidates for Holy Orders, developed the fact, that the average salaries of clergymen in Connecticut and Virginia, do not exceed $400 per annum. A well-known clergyman of New York asserted, that the true cause of the scarcity of candidates for orders lay in the fact that a large proportion of the clergymen of the Episcopal Church are "starving," "actually starving!"

From the reports of the Missionary Board, it would appear that the income falls considerably short of the expenditures. It was alleged that the cause of this is to be found in the distrust existing between the contributors and disbursements of the funds.

The admission of California as a Diocese was one of the earliest and most warmly debated questions acted on during the whole session. The matter was finally compromised by the appointment of a Missionary Bishop to that State.

The case of the seceding Bishop of North Carolina called for special legislation, to allow of the consecration of his successor, the Rev. Dr. Atkinson. The House of Bishops, and the House of Clerical and Lay Delegates, accordingly concurred in a canon to provide that "an abandonment of the Church, either by open renunciation or by formal admission into any other Church not in communion with this, was, ipso facto, a deposition."

The Convention took steps to secure the best and most correct edition of King James's Bible. A Committee of Collation will report on the matter at the next session of the Convention.

THE BURNED MAIL CAR.—The Mail Car which was burned on the Cleveland and Columbus Railroad, three weeks since, opened only at the sides, and there was no means of communicating with the Conductor or Engineer, consequently the train was not stopped until the flames, burning out into the darkness of the night, attracted attention. When the train was finally stopped, the flames from the burning car were some twenty feet high, lighting up the country for miles around. The flames occupied the side apertures, and there was no ingress except through the ends, which were battered in as soon as they could be, and what was left unaccommodated was taken out and extinguished as soon as possible. Of the baggage, out of some sixty trunks, scarcely a whole one was found. The mail shared a similar fate. Not a mail bag, either lock or canvas, was found worth replying. Of the contents, some eight or ten bundles of the burned remnants have been saved, and now await in the Cleveland Post Office the orders of the Department. It is most of it due at Cincinnati, Louisville, and St. Louis, and Southern offices. It came mostly from New York city, and included a very heavy foreign mail brought by the Atlantic. A very large portion of the New York mail consists of bills of goods, invoices, notes, drafts, acceptances, &c., the usual business paper of that large commercial city, which at this season of the year compose the larger portion of the mail West.

According to the last advices from China, Commodore Perry had acquired one of the Boats Islands, (this is the correct spelling.) Those Islands are close to Japan, and Prof. Neumann, several years ago, gave a description of them from Japanese sources. Boats is the Japanese pronunciation of two Chinese letters which mean uninhabited or empty islands. They have been known to the Japanese for ages, but no sovereignty has been pretended over them.

The Lancaster (Pa.) Independent Whig states that mining operations have just been commenced in the Poque Valley, where valuable deposits of argentiferous Glens have been found, in some cases yielding as high as $500 of silver to the ton of ore. These discoveries extend over an area of some twenty-four square miles.

Dr. Witherspoon, whose death was announced a week or two since, as having occurred at his residence near Hillsborough, N. C., was the grandson of the celebrated Dr. Witherspoon of Nassau Hall, who bore so conspicuous a part in our Revolutionary history, and signed the Declaration of Independence.

SUMMARY.

The Directors of the Crystal Palace have resolved to keep the Exhibition open through the winter, instead of closing it in December, as they had previously contemplated. They are impelled to this step by the pecuniary exigencies of the season, and by the consideration that an early close must deprive an immense number of persons of the pleasure and benefit of visiting the Palace. From the first of September to the present day, the receipts have been highly satisfactory, averaging four thousand dollars or more a day, while the current expenses are but $200. The receipts of the fortnight ending Oct. 23d, were $35,000. Stoves will be immediately erected in sufficient number to keep the building comfortable, and new ones will be added as the weather becomes more severe.

Died, in Clarkson, Monroe Co., on the 17th Oct., Cornelius Vroom, the sleeping man. While on exhibition in New York he was taken sick, which seemed to induce a weak state for a short period, and then a simple condition, with intervals of wakefulness, until he was brought home on the 14th. He talked but very little, inquiring after his mother, who had been dead two years, his father and brothers, whom he seemed partially to recognize. He complained of great internal heat and soreness of his throat and stomach. On the morning of the day of his death he called for food, and ate a hearty meal, and then, it seemed to be in pain until about 2 o'clock P. M., when he died without a struggle. His age was some 34 years.

A new route from Boston to New York will be opened about the 1st of January next. At the Boston end, this route commences with the Norfolk County Road, and runs to Blackstone, a distance of 25 miles; from Blackstone to Southbridge, a distance of 22 miles; a road from Southbridge to Norwich, over the Norwich and Worcester Road, 33 miles; crossing over a bridge, it here connects with the New London, Willimantic and Palmer Road to New London, 13 miles; from New London, over the New London and New Haven Road, 52 miles; from New Haven to New York, 76 miles. Total, 225 miles.

The St. Louis Intelligencer states that not long since the steamer Hiltman, about an hour previous to her departure for the Illinois River, exploded or blew out the joint of her cross-pipe, over the after-end of the boilers, caused by an extra pressure of steam. It seems, on examination, that the safety-valve had been intentionally braced down in such a way that the boilers would have exploded before the safety-valve would have given warning to the engineers of any extra accumulation of steam. The trivial accident alluded to, in all probability, saved the lives of many persons who were on board of the boat at the time.

The Chicago and Mississippi Railroad is completed, and the cars running through from Alton to Bloomington. This makes a continuous Railroad connection between the Mississippi and the East, and passengers who take the Southern Indiana and Michigan route can reach New York in the short space of 60 hours, or two days and a half. The table of time from St. Louis will be about as follows, if all the connections are made: To Chicago, 24 hours; Cleveland, 37; Buffalo, 43, and New York, 60 hours. To Pittsburgh, 43, and Philadelphia, 70 hours. Cincinnati, 36 hours.

A shrewd Yankee, at the Horse Exhibition, at Springfield, outwitted a "striped pig," and came in ahead of the Maine Law. The Yankee hired a spot of land within the limits of the Arenal grounds, which are beyond the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts authorities, having been ceded by that State to the United States—he not designating the purpose for which he wished to use it. He immediately erected a huge tent, which was supplied with liquor, and which were dashed out by constabulary or fifty bar-tenders at a shilling a glass. He contended that the laws of the United States protect him in his traffic.

The lawsuit noticed some months since, in which Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe and her husband are the plaintiffs, and F. W. Thomas, of Philadelphia, the publisher of a German translation of Uncle Tom's Cabin, the defendant, was taken up in the U. S. Court, at Philadelphia, Oct. 27, for argument before Judge Grier and Kane. The question at issue is, whether a copyright holds in any other language than that in which the work is entered. It was never raised before, and there is no precedent bearing on it, either in England or this country.

A letter from Mr. Edward Wheeler, formerly a resident of this city, says the Syracuse Standard of the 17th Oct., but at present residing in Kingston, C. W., informs us that Jerry died in Kingston on Saturday, the 10th Oct. The disease which terminated his earthly career is not stated. Jerry, although a very humble individual, has filled a considerable space in the history of our city, and the United States Court for the Northern District of New York.

A dispatch dated Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 25, says:—Edison, the inventor, who made an occasion at Baltimore to-day, landed near Christiansburg, in this County, making a distance of 80 miles in an hour and ten minutes. The last 20 miles were done in the almost incredible time of twenty minutes. He says he reached an altitude of four miles, and was hurried along by a heavy gale nearly the whole distance.

One hundred young men have left Richmond, Me., for Kentucky, where they intend to cut timber and build roads. This is a new enterprise, and with the horse, snow and go-head-stiveness of Maine mechanics, it cannot but succeed. More mechanics will follow soon. The vessels built will be floated down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

Perhaps it may be doing our lady patrons a favor to tell them that linings, which may be found in most drug stores, is an excellent substitute for the white of eggs in clearing coffee. It contains the same chemical property, albumen—and two cents worth of linings will last longer than two or three dozen eggs.

Dr. Witherspoon, whose death was announced a week or two since, as having occurred at his residence near Hillsborough, N. C., was the grandson of the celebrated Dr. Witherspoon of Nassau Hall, who bore so conspicuous a part in our Revolutionary history, and signed the Declaration of Independence.

Some 1,600 acres of land have recently been purchased in Iowa, on which a colony of monks have settled. Among their peculiar habits may be mentioned that they never mingle with the world; and when they put on a new suit of clothes, that suit is kept on waking or sleeping, till it falls off or becomes unfit to wear.

A Clergyman from Mississippi commenced legal measures against the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company for injuries to himself, his wife and child, by the collision of the 28th of July. They have agreed to pay $10,000 damages, upon which he has discontinued the suit.

Two persons hunting in Litchfield, Conn., shot a strange animal, which scientific men have decided to be a Skunk, of the same kind as are found in South America. He measured from head to tail 38 inches, and had longer than that on those found in warmer climates—probably to protect him from the cold.

The British mail steamship Conway, from St. Thomas, bound to Savannah, put into Charleston on the 24th inst., in distress, having encountered a very severe gale. She reports that a severe storm had visited the West India Islands, and that St. Thomas was nearly inundated.

At Denberville, Amelia County, Va., on the 16th inst., John W. Lynch, an old blacksmith, of that place, shot a servant girl of his own, killing her dead. It is supposed that he was at the time laboring under mental aberration, from the effect of drinking.

The Irish citizens of Santa Clara, California, have presented Capt. Kendrick, of the American Artillery, with a purse of $1,600, as a mark of their gratitude for the aid which he rendered to the patriot, O'Donoghue, in his escape.

Two little girls were recently arrested in New York for picking pockets. At their trial it was proved that they were under the instruction of a woman named Butler, who taught them how to pick pockets in crowds, and stages, and railroad cars, and then divided the spoils with them.

The estimated expenses of the New York Alma-House for the year 1854 are $232,150, being about 10 per cent. more than the present year. There are between five and six thousand persons constantly under the charge of that Department.

The New York Journal of Commerce says that the Metropolitan Hotel was sold a few days ago to A. T. Stewart, Esq., the dry goods merchant, for about $350,000. It was bought for investment. The lease of the present occupants has several years yet to run.

On Sunday morning, Oct. 25th, there was a fire at the corner of Fulton and Nassau-st., N. Y., which destroyed the structure known as "Fowler's Building," with most of the goods it held. Loss estimated at $250,000. Two or three lives were also lost by the falling of a floor upon the firemen.

One hundred and forty-two railroad trains leave Boston daily, viz: by Old Colony, 17; Providence, 18; Worcester, 23; Fitchburg, 20; Lowell, 15; Boston and Maine, 30; and Eastern, 11. This, of course, includes all the branches. The same number return daily.

The French papers mention that the guillotine of Orleans was put up at auction the other day, by order of the Mayor. The upper price was 20 francs, and the guillotine was knocked down for 30 francs to a young man, who instantly hurled it on the spot.

An evening paper says the new revenue cutters are expected soon to leave New York for their destinations. The William L. Marcy for San Francisco, the Jefferson Davis for Puget's Sound, and the other four for various ports on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Mr. McLane, our new Minister to China, takes the overland route to India, and goes thence to Hong Kong, where he will run his chance of getting on board one of the ships of the Japan Squadron, and of finding his way to the government of the Celestials.

Alfred Carson, Chief Engineer of the Farm Department, has commenced a suit against Greeley & McElrath for libels on him respecting the alarm bell striking apparatus, and also in relation to Engine No. 4. Damages laid at $50,000.

Mr. Spencer of New Bedford, Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson, of Nashua, Mrs. Huxley of Nantucket, Mr. E. Chamberlain, two Misses Chamberlain, Miss Clark, and Miss Knapp, have sailed from Boston in the Waverly, for the Sandwich Islands, as Missionaries.

There are now built and in process of building, no less than seven Roman Catholic edifices in Chicago. One of these, new building, will be worth $100,000, and two others, already erected, are estimated to be worth $50,000 each.

The Mainline Baptist Church have it in contemplation to choose a pastor from among the native preachers, to be ordained and set over them, that the missionaries may be more at liberty to preach wherever an opportunity may present.

Since the passage of the steamboat law, not one life has been lost by explosions in the district of Cincinnati. Previous to the law there were sixty explosions within twenty-five years, causing a loss of upwards of 3,000 lives.

There are now in the U. S. Treasury, subject to draft, twenty-seven millions of dollars. The ordinary revenue of the year ending June 30th, is said to have exceeded that of any preceding year by 9,000,000 dollars.

Mr. Flosser, of Lancaster, Pa., whose wife was killed on the New Haven Railroad, at Newell, last spring, and himself much injured, has been paid $10,000 by the Company as a remuneration for the loss and injury he sustained.

The Michigan Southern Railroad line has been completed, and passengers can now be ticketed through to St. Louis all the way by railroad, by calling at the office, corner of Broadway and Dey-st., N. Y.

The residence of the late J. Fenimore Cooper, at Cooperstown, recently converted into a hotel, was fired by an incendiary, and burned to the ground. A portion of the furniture was saved.

The contract for building the Railroad from Cincinnati to St. Louis, and including the equipment for the western section from the Wabash, has been purchased by Messrs. Page & Bacon, of St. Louis, for a bonus of half a million.

The steamer Northern Light, with reefered Californians on board, put into Norfolk in distress last week. A dispatch from Norfolk, dated Oct. 26, says:—Last night a Californian arrived here by the Northern Light was robbed of $1,200, and another was missing with $4,000.

The first Agricultural Fair ever held in North Carolina has just closed at Raleigh. The attendance is said to have been very large. The Hon. Mr. Venable delivered an address on the occasion.

The Richmond Enquirer has an advertisement of a gentleman to sell his property, a portion of which is slaves, because he wants to spend the balance of his days as a missionary.

The Cleveland Plaindealer says that Miss Emma R. Coe has been pursuing a course of legal studies, for the purpose of qualifying herself for the practice of that profession.

The young lady who had been in a somewhat state for over a month at Harrisonville, Va., died recently. The physicians pronounced it a paralysis of the stomach.

The slaves in Mason County, Va., (says the Perkinsburg Gazette), are becoming migratory in their habits. Within the last fortnight, eight have made their escape to parts unknown.

Judge Bronson has been removed from the post of Collector of New York, and Herman J. Redfield, the Naval Collector of New York, will be his successor.

The property, corner of Fifth-av. and Thirtieth-st., N. Y., six lots of ground, was sold the other day at auction by E. H. Ludlow, for cash, at $25,450.

Philadelphia locomotives are not only sent to most parts of the United States where railroads have been constructed, but to Russia, Austria, and even England.

The coldness of a region, independent of its latitude, is in direct ratio to its height, and a height of 500 feet is equivalent to a degree of latitude nearer the poles.

The American Institute Fair did not pay expenses, in consequence of the greater attendance up town.

On Sunday morning, Oct. 25th, $30,000 worth of property was destroyed by fire at the Atlantic Dock, Brooklyn.

The Governor of Maryland has appointed the 24th November as Thanksgiving Day.

New York Market—November 1, 1853.

Wheat—No. 1 52 1/2 to 53; No. 2 50 1/2 to 51; No. 3 48 1/2 to 49 1/2; No. 4 46 1/2 to 47 1/2; No. 5 44 1/2 to 45 1/2; No. 6 42 1/2 to 43 1/2; No. 7 40 1/2 to 41 1/2; No. 8 38 1/2 to 39 1/2; No. 9 36 1/2 to 37 1/2; No. 10 34 1/2 to 35 1/2; No. 11 32 1/2 to 33 1/2; No. 12 30 1/2 to 31 1/2; No. 13 28 1/2 to 29 1/2; No. 14 26 1/2 to 27 1/2; No. 15 24 1/2 to 25 1/2; No. 16 22 1/2 to 23 1/2; No. 17 20 1/2 to 21 1/2; No. 18 18 1/2 to 19 1/2; No. 19 16 1/2 to 17 1/2; No. 20 14 1/2 to 15 1/2; No. 21 12 1/2 to 13 1/2; No. 22 10 1/2 to 11 1/2; No. 23 8 1/2 to 9 1/2; No. 24 6 1/2 to 7 1/2; No. 25 4 1/2 to 5 1/2; No. 26 2 1/2 to 3 1/2; No. 27 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 28 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 29 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 30 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 31 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 32 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 33 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 34 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 35 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 36 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 37 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 38 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 39 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 40 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 41 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 42 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 43 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 44 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 45 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 46 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 47 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 48 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 49 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 50 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 51 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 52 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 53 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 54 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 55 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 56 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 57 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 58 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 59 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 60 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 61 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 62 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 63 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 64 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 65 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 66 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 67 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 68 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 69 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 70 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 71 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 72 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 73 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 74 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 75 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 76 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 77 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 78 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 79 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 80 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 81 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 82 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 83 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 84 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 85 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 86 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 87 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 88 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 89 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 90 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 91 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 92 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 93 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 94 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 95 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 96 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 97 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 98 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 99 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 100 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 101 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 102 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 103 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 104 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 105 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 106 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 107 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 108 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 109 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 110 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 111 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 112 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 113 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 114 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 115 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 116 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 117 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 118 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 119 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 120 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 121 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 122 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 123 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 124 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 125 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 126 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 127 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 128 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 129 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 130 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 131 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 132 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 133 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 134 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 135 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 136 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 137 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 138 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 139 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 140 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 141 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 142 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 143 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 144 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 145 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 146 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 147 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 148 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 149 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 150 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 151 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 152 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 153 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 154 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 155 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 156 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 157 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 158 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 159 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 160 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 161 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 162 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 163 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 164 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 165 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 166 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 167 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 168 1/2 to 2 1/2; No. 169

For each additional square, two-thirds the above price

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOS. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. X.—NO. 22.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1883.

WHOLE NO. 490.

The Sabbath Recorder.

OBLIGATION OF THE SEVENTH DAY.

BY JAMES A. HOOK.

The Universal Observance of the Sabbath in History.

Continued from the Recorder of Nov. 3.

We are, however, far from believing, that the work of Israel's portrayed sin, in relation to the Sabbath and otherwise, is already past. The prophets exhibit the crisis of their rebellion as being in the last times; and in our own day there seems a preparation for it. Superstition is giving place to infidelity; and the sacred principles and the existing practice of the Sabbath are being questioned.

The Eastern Association is composed of the churches in Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, and that part of New York lying east of the Hudson River. It is celebrating the fourth week in May of each year.

The Central Association embraces the churches in New York lying between the Hudson River and the Sound. Its annual meeting is held during the second week of June.

The Western Association includes the churches in New York and Pennsylvania. Its annual meeting is held during the fourth week of June.

The Virginia Association embraces the churches in Virginia, and meets during the first week of September.

The Ohio Association includes all the churches in Ohio, and holds its annual meeting during the first week in October.

The North Western Association is composed of the churches in Wisconsin and Illinois, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Southern Association is composed of the churches in the Southern States, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The American Association is composed of the churches in the United States, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The International Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

The Universal Association is composed of the churches in all the world, and its annual meeting is held during the fourth week in September.

STATISTICS OF SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST CHURCHES—1883.

ASSOCIATIONS.	CHURCHES.	MEMBERS.	DEACONS.	CLERGY.	PASTORS.
Adrian	1	100	1	1	1
Albany	2	200	2	2	2
Albany	3	300	3	3	3
Albany	4	400	4	4	4
Albany	5	500	5	5	5
Albany	6	600	6	6	6
Albany	7	700	7	7	7
Albany	8	800	8	8	8
Albany	9	900	9	9	9
Albany	10	1000	10	10	10
Albany	11	1100	11	11	11
Albany	12	1200	12	12	12
Albany	13	1300	13	13	13
Albany	14	1400	14	14	14
Albany	15	1500	15	15	15
Albany	16	1600	16	16	16
Albany	17	1700	17	17	17
Albany	18	1800	18	18	18
Albany	19	1900	19	19	19
Albany	20	2000	20	20	20
Albany	21	2100	21	21	21
Albany	22	2200	22	22	22
Albany	23	2300	23	23	23
Albany	24	2400	24	24	24
Albany	25	2500	25	25	25
Albany	26	2600	26	26	26
Albany	27	2700	27	27	27
Albany	28	2800	28	28	28
Albany	29	2900	29	29	29
Albany	30	3000	30	30	30
Albany	31	3100	31	31	31
Albany	32	3200	32	32	32
Albany	33	3300	33	33	33
Albany	34	3400	34	34	34
Albany	35	3500	35	35	35
Albany	36	3600	36	36	36
Albany	37	3700	37	37	37
Albany	38	3800	38	38	38
Albany	39	3900	39	39	39
Albany	40	4000	40	40	40
Albany	41	4100	41	41	41
Albany	42	4200	42	42	42
Albany	43	4300	43	43	43
Albany	44	4400	44	44	44
Albany	45	4500	45	45	45
Albany	46	4600	46	46	46
Albany	47	4700	47	47	47
Albany	48	4800	48	48	48
Albany	49	4900	49	49	49
Albany	50	5000	50	50	50
Albany	51	5100	51	51	51
Albany	52	5200	52	52	52
Albany	53	5300	53	53	53
Albany	54	5400	54	54	54
Albany	55	5500	55	55	55
Albany	56	5600	56	56	56
Albany	57	5700	57	57	57
Albany	58	5800	58	58	58
Albany	59	5900	59	59	59
Albany	60	6000	60	60	60
Albany	61	6100	61	61	61
Albany	62	6200	62	62	62
Albany	63	6300	63	63	63
Albany	64	6400	64	64	64
Albany	65	6500	65	65	65
Albany	66	6600	66	66	66
Albany	67	6700	67	67	67
Albany	68	6800	68	68	68
Albany	69	6900	69	69	69
Albany	70	7000	70	70	70
Albany	71	7100	71	71	71
Albany	72	7200	72	72	72
Albany	73	7300	73	73	73
Albany	74	7400	74	74	74
Albany	75	7500	75	75	75
Albany	76	7600	76	76	76
Albany	77	7700	77	77	77
Albany	78	7800	78	78	78
Albany	79	7900	79	79	79
Albany	80	8000	80	80	80
Albany	81	8100	81	81	81
Albany	82	8200	82	82	82
Albany	83	8300	83	83	83
Albany	84	8400	84	84	84
Albany	85	8500	85	85	85
Albany	86	8600	86	86	86
Albany	87	8700	87	87	87
Albany	88	8800	88	88	88
Albany	89	8900	89	89	89
Albany	90	9000	90	90	90
Albany	91	9100	91	91	91
Albany	92	9200	92	92	92
Albany	93	9300	93	93	93
Albany	94	9400	94	94	94
Albany	95	9500	95	95	95
Albany	96	9600	96	96	96
Albany	97	9700	97	97	97
Albany	98	9800	98	98	98
Albany	99	9900	99	99	99
Albany	100	10000	100	100	100

BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN.

BY WILLIAM C. HENRY.

Oh! does not duty are blessed alone
Whom drives a powerful team to reap
The power who plow man has sown
A blessing for the eyes that weep.
The light of sorrow shall fill again
The life that overflows with tears
And weary hours of weal and pain
Are pastimes of happy years.
There is a day of sunny rest
For every dark and troubled night;
And grief that lingers in the breast
Shall find its home with early light.
And thou, who art thy friend's true friend
Shalt find the better days ahead;
Hope that a happier, brighter shore
Will give him to thy arms again.
Nor let the good man's truest friend
Through life's long journey stray;
Though parted and broken be his heart,
And sorrow's long day of pain shall pay
For all its children's sufferings.

"SOUTHERN AID SOCIETY."

One of the most serious and significant movements of the present day, is the organization of a Society, in the city of New York, to aid Southern slaveholding churches in maintaining the institution of religion. Had not the circumstance been announced in a very authoritative way, incredulity would have been pardonable. But now there is no room for incredulity. Of this new organization, bearing the title at the head of this article, one of the daily papers gives the following account:

The object is the diffusion of the Gospel truth in the Southern and South-Western States, and in all ordinary cases this to be done under the direction of ecclesiastical bodies, or missionary organizations of an evangelical character, within said States. The President is James Boorman, and among the Vice Presidents are Amos G. Phelps, Dr. Cox, and Cyrus F. Smith. Mr. Hallock, of the Journal of Commerce, is Treasurer, and Dr. Beane, Dr. Bled, and Dr. Eddy, of Newark, are on the Executive Committee.

The Society has just issued a long address to the public, in which they fully recognize the importance of other societies and hope for their aid and co-operation, especially of the American Home Missionary Society. But they say that Society "is restricted by its rules from aiding any minister or missionary, however faithful, laborious, or self-denying, who under any circumstances is a slaveholder. And, secondly, the impression is general at the South, that the Home Missionary Society is allied to Abolitionism, so called. The impression, however erroneous, renders the aid afforded by that Society to churches in the Southern and South-Western States, of doubtful value in reference to success; inasmuch that, in some cases where such aid had been rendered, it has been voluntarily relinquished by the recipients, needy though they were, as a damage rather than a benefit. While, therefore, we are convinced that the American Home Missionary Society, without a change of policy, is essentially unable, even if it were disposed, to perform our work, we desire still to cherish toward it the sentiments of kindness and good will, which, with some of us, date back to its organization, and even before; for some of us aided in its formation. Most of the members of the Southern Aid Society are, and long have been, supporters of the American Home Missionary Society; and some of them are among its largest contributors. The object is to aid in the work of first improving their civil and political condition, and then to aid in the work of teaching them the way of life! Will not God hold us to a strict account, if under any pretext whatever, we neglect to minister to their spiritual necessities, when we have such a favorable opportunity of so doing?"

They also add that the masters are favorable to such an enterprise; that "they are, in great proportion, perhaps, as any single body of Christian ministers in the whole world, faithful men of God, spiritually minded, self-denying disciples of the Lord Jesus."

Their address closes with a strong caveat against even the suspicion of Abolitionism, promising not to meddle for or against Slavery, and commending their enterprise to the Lord Jesus Christ, God and Man.

With regard to their mode of operations they say: "The Southern Aid Society intend to deal with their Southern brethren in the confidence of Christian friendship. Reproach, calumny, and all sorts of injustice, have been tried upon the South for a quarter of a century, without any good results; the Southern Aid Society will try the opposite policy of kindness, sympathy, and co-operation in every good word and work. Let us trust our Southern fellow-citizens and fellow-Christians with generous confidence—with fraternal appreciation; and see if this more cordial way will not prosper—will the benediction of God will not crown it, to his own glory and the good of all! Thus doing, we are fully persuaded that, through the counsel and concurrence of corresponding bodies at the South, our missionaries will be able to preach the Gospel in its power and purity, to every master and every slave who can be reached by any human instrumentality. If the Christian public will give us the necessary means, and the Lord will, we may hope for great results, ultimately, from the operations of this Society."

In pleading for aid for their assumed converts, they say:—
"Have the slave population no claim upon us? What have they done that we may not sustain a faithful ministry in teaching them the way of salvation? I may not need them missionaries without accompanying our benevolence with such measures as shall suggest a doubt to the people whether we are content to seek their conversion with the simplicity of the early Christians! Need we have the least apprehension lest the registering and purifying influences of the Scriptures should fall of its proper action upon the best interests of all—the servants, the masters, the church, and the State?"

And if it is according to the very genius of our religion that the poor should have the Gospel preached to them, we ought not to withhold our hands from the work under the pretence of first improving their civil and political condition, and then to aid in the work of teaching them the way of life! Will not God hold us to a strict account, if under any pretext whatever, we neglect to minister to their spiritual necessities, when we have such a favorable opportunity of so doing?"

RUINS OF ANCIENT BABYLON.

The French Government has employed a party of gentlemen to explore the site of ancient Babylon. From reports just received from them, it appears that they have ascertained, beyond reasonable doubt, that the ruins beneath a mound, called the Kasr, are those of the marvellous palace of Nebuchadnezzar. They are in such a state of confusion and decay, that it is impossible to form from them any idea of the extent or character of the edifice. They appear, however, to extend beneath the bed of the Euphrates—a circumstance accounted for by the change in the course of that river. In them have been found sarcophagi, of alabaster and stone, and so small that the bodies of the dead must have been packed up in them; the chin touching the knees, and the arms being pressed on the breast by the legs. The sarcophagi have every appearance of having been used for the lowest class of society; but, notwithstanding the place in which they were found, the discoverers are inclined to think they are of Parthian, not Chaldean origin.

There have also been found numerous fragments of enameled bricks, containing portions of the figures of men and animals, together with coniform inscriptions; the latter white in color, upon a blue ground. According to these bricks afford a strong proof that the ruins are those of the palace of Nebuchadnezzar, inasmuch as the ornaments on them appear to be sporting subjects, such as are described by Homer and Diodorus.

The foundations having been dug down to in certain parts, it has been ascertained that they are formed of bricks about a foot square, united by a strong cement, and that they are in blocks, as if they had been sapped in all directions.

crowds, are in a fair state of preservation. M. Fretland thinks that the dead in the sarcophagi were some of the soldiers of Alexander or Seleucus. The crowns are simple bands, with three leaves in the shape of laurel on one side, and three on the other. The leaves are very neatly executed. Beneath the hands are leaves of gold, which it is supposed covered the eyes. From the quantity of iron found in some of the coffins, it appears that the bodies were entirely enveloped in it; and in one there is no iron, but some ear-rings, a proof that it was occupied by a female. The sarcophagi are about two and three-quarters yards in length, by between half and three-quarters of a yard wide, and are entirely formed of bricks, united by mortar. In addition to all this, a tomb, containing statues in marble or alabaster, of Juno, Venus, and of a reclining figure wearing a Phrygian cap, together with some rings, ear-rings, and other articles of jewelry, has been found, as also numerous statues, vases, pithoi, articles of pottery, black stones, &c., &c., of Greek, Persian, or Chaldean workmanship. [Lan. Jour.

THE HISTORY OF SERMONS.

When shall the world be favored with a history of the pulpit, and who will write it? Such a work is a great desideratum, and well executed, might prove of incalculable value. The world is full of material, which only needs to be collected, edited, and arranged. Let some one of our men of might gird himself for the task.

One chapter in such a work, or perhaps more, should be given to the origin and history of sermons, and curious indeed would be its developments; especially if all their secret history could be made known. Let us give two or three facts, which may go to show somewhat of what we mean:—

One of the most beautiful and popular sermons of Robert Hall is the one occasioned by the death of the amiable Princess Charlotte, who died in 1817—a sermon which he had not even thought of delivering an hour before its commencement. Devoted to his duty, this eminent man seldom looked at a newspaper, and was supremely ignorant of passing events, so that he was not aware of the time when the Princess was to be buried. The funeral ceremony took place on Wednesday evening, just at the time of Mr. Hall's weekly lecture. Royal patronage generally have attention paid them from the pulpit, especially at the hour of interment, but the thought never occurred to Mr. Hall that anything more than an ordinary service would take place at Harvey Lane. On his arrival there, as usual, he found the whole house was lighted up and crowded. "How is this, sir?" asked Mr. Hall of one of the deacons. "What does this crowd mean?" "Why, sir, the Princess Charlotte, you know, is buried this evening, and the people are come to hear your funeral sermon for her." "Well, sir, I am very sorry, but I had entirely forgotten it," said Mr. Hall. To introduce the service, as I will shew down in the history, and endeavor to trace of its origin to say. The substance of the sermon on the topic, which appears in the first volume of his works, was the result of half an hour's reflection; the sermon was afterward written and published, and produced great effects. The widowed Princess described it as the best of all sermons sent him on the occasion; and another eminent man thought that the production of such a sermon went far to account for the mysterious removal of the Princess.

Much smaller events than the removal of the great have suggested good sermons. The admirable discourse of "Walking by Faith," the first sermon by Fuller, owed its origin to a smaller matter. It was delivered at an annual meeting of the Northamptonshire Association, at whose request it was printed. Like the sermon of his friend Hall, not a word of it was written till after its delivery. On his way to the Association the roads in several places were flooded, arising from the recent rains, which had made the rivers overflow. Mr. Fuller came to one place where the water was very deep, and he, being a stranger to its exact depth, was unwilling to go on. A plain countryman, residing in the neighborhood, better acquainted with the water than the preacher, cried out, "Go on, sir; you are quite safe." Fuller urged on his horse; but the water soon touched his middle, and he stopped to think. "Go on, sir, it is right," shouted the man. Taking the man at his word, Fuller proceeded, and the text was suggested. "We walk by faith, not by sight." [National Magazine.

A GIRL'S WISDOM AND EARNESTNESS.

About twenty years ago, the committee of the Bible Society, at the suggestion of the Rev. High Stowell, unanimously resolved to present to every emancipated negro, capable of reading, a New Testament of suitable size. A special fund was raised for this purpose, and public meetings were held in many parts of England and Wales in furtherance of this design. On the morning after one of these meetings at a town where Dr. Staindoff was the guest of a friend, one of his little daughters, accompanied by two or three of her younger sisters, presented him with a sealed packet, requesting it might not be opened until he should have left the house, saying, "We hope it may be accepted as a small contribution from four little girls, to assist in the supply of the Holy Scriptures to the poor negro children in the West Indies." Her parents had left the room, but there was a gentleman present who had breakfasted with them—an intimate friend of the family—who listened to the words of the dear child with marked interest. That gentleman was Dr. Staindoff's only companion in a long journey during the war of the day, and shortly after taking their seats in the coach, the seal of the little packet was broken, and to his surprise, the Doctor found that it contained nearly five pounds.

On his alighting to the scene they had just witnessed, his companion's eyes filled with tears as he said, "Yes, sir, it is indeed an interesting child; but she is much more, for she is a pious Christian." And after a pause, he said, with evidently deep feeling, "To that child, sir, I am indebted for all my happiness upon earth, and all my hopes for eternity." He added, that he had been connected in business with her excellent father, but, unlike him, was not a believer in the truths of the Bible, and had made no secret of his unbelief. On one occasion, this dear child, then only nine years old, was present when her father was endeavoring, but in vain, to convince this gentleman of his fatal error. "When the painful conversation ended, and her father had left the room, she asked this gentleman to take a walk with her in the garden; and when no one could overtake them, she inquired whether she might ask him a question. "Certainly," he replied; "any question you please." "Then," said she, "have you ever read the New Testament through with a desire to understand it?" "No," he answered, "I never have." "I thought so," said she; "for I am sure you would not have spoken of it to my father as you did just now, if you had." And in an earnest manner she added, "Oh! do read it, and do wish to understand it." His concluding words were, "My dear girl, that child's earnestness and tears did more for me than any argument had ever done; they led me to the Bible, and the Bible led me to my Saviour."

A HAPPY HINDOO GIRL.

Elizabeth Ann, a little East Indian girl, attended for a considerable time at the mission day-school, Bombay. She was always very obedient to her teachers, and tried to get on nicely with her lessons. She was remarkable for an amiable and affectionate disposition, and was much loved by all. But at length she fell sick, and for many days was very ill. Amidst the pain, however, which she suffered, she never complained, but bore with patience, because she knew that it was God who afflicted her. She had no wish to recover, and seemed to think that God was going to take her to heaven; and this thought made her very happy. She knew that she had been a great sinner, but she knew also that the blood of Jesus could take away all sin. At one time she said to her mother, "O mother, I have been a very wicked girl; but were not Mary Magdalene, and Paul

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 10, 1853.

SECOND MARRIAGES.

The Apostle says of the married woman, that "if she be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord." 1 Cor. vii. 39. The qualifying expression, "only in the Lord," shows that she is to marry only a Christian; no other meaning can fairly be given to it. For the Corinthians had submitted the question, whether those who had unbelieving or idolatrous partners should abstain from them. They doubted whether a Christian might even retain, as husband or wife, one who was an unbeliever. To be satisfied about it, they consulted the Apostle. His answer was, that the Christian husband should not put away his unbelieving wife; that the Christian wife should not depart from her unbelieving husband; that the unbelieving party was no more under to the other, than the unbelieving children were to their believing parents. Thus he decides that, when the relation already exists, it is not to be dissolved upon the reception of the gospel by one of the parties, but to be maintained in the hope that it may prove the means of salvation to the other also. But if death has dissolved the relation, rendering it lawful to the survivor to enter into a second marriage, then by no means let the new connection be "only in the Lord," that is, only with a believer.

Now no valid reason can be assigned why a wife should be restricted to a believer in marriage, which does not apply with equal force to one who form the connection for the first time. Besides, God has always frowned upon the marriage of "the sons of God" with "the daughters of men." Gen. 6: 2. His great people were expressly prohibited from entering into such connection. Dent. 7: 1. The violation of this law by Solomon was one of the means of turning away his heart from the worship of Jehovah. 1 Kings 11: 4. We indeed think it may be set down as one of the most fruitful sources of religious darkness which affects the church of God in this age.

It is impossible for a man to maintain the purity of his altar, and train up his children in the worship and adoration of the Lord, when the wife is in least opposed to such things. The affection which he bears for her, the sympathy which he feels to render her home agreeable, and his repugnance to any thing that would conflict with one whose sympathy and love are every thing that he can rely on to make his earthly life pleasant, will prompt him to relax his diligence, and, too, that it is a vain effort to lead his children in a way that the mother disapproves in reference to which she, at best, is a feeble influence. Her influence is that which her young minds—her example, they imitate. He cannot counteract her influence. She baffles his utmost skill, and he feels that it is useless to strive to be better, and gives it up altogether.

To the woman who has an ungodly husband, the same still. On the supposition that she is a living Christian, how desolate her home must seem, that is not at the same time the same shade of her Saviour also! O how hard to find, by daily experience, that the Lord is not a home for his wife, and a home for his wife's Saviour! He erects his altar to the God she worships; he maintains the form of family prayer; never asks a blessing at table; never calls his household together to instruct them in heavenly things; never talks to his children about God and heaven; cannot enter into her religious feelings, nor appreciate them; is about as ready to be living without God in the world as we may say, for none is desolate; for that is the desolate where Christ does not dwell in his presence, no matter how many may be in the house with things that are not of God.

No wonder, then, that a woman who has given herself to God, has no business to place herself in a situation. It is hard work enough to maintain the Christian conflict, even though aided by all the advantages of a godly home. It is a difficulty to be overcome, and the influence of an ungodly husband is a family, even temporarily, which endangers her growth in the divine life; and she is entitled to put herself in a situation for life. "Seek first the kingdom of God," is the principle by which she should be governed in contracting matrimony, as in other undertakings. Does she marry, "Lead me not into temptation," then, does she wantonly run into temptation? She will not—she cannot—until she has "left her first love." It is only when a man's zeal has somewhat declined, and his pleasures begin to fascinate the heart, that our young sisters are willing to give themselves to those who have no fear of God, and no love to their eyes.

We do not write as much as we would on this subject, lest we should become lengthy. But, before closing, we would add a word in reference to the intermarriages of our people with those of other denominations. Now we have no word to say against the general principle of those who differ from us. The excellent of the earth are not exclusively among the Baptists; they are found among all denominations. But we never see or hear of a Seventh-day Baptist contracting marriage with an adherent of the first day of the week, without the most serious apprehensions, that the final result will be an abandonment of the Sabbath. Indeed, our denomination has lost much in this way as almost any other. Even our young men run great risks, when they take such a step; but far greater is the hazard to our young women. If they make doubtful wives, they must come under subjection. Eph. 5: 22, 23. The husband is the ruler of his own house, and if he says that no work shall be done on Sunday, it is the duty of the wife to submit. She is not bound to submit so far as to put her own hands to work on the Sabbath, it is true; but if her husband chooses that work shall be done on the premises, and brings on a company of men to do it, for whom meals must be prepared, she has no alternative but to submit to see her house a scene of busy toil during all the sacred hours. If the husband chooses to call his children into the work also, it is not for her to oppose; she must yield. And however determined she may be, at first, never to pollute her own conscience, she finds, at last, that her resolution is giving way. She grows weary of the struggle; she abandons the Sabbath; and comforts herself with the hope, that she can get to heaven by doing as Christians of other denominations do.

This is not a fancy sketch. We could cite a number of cases that have fallen under our own observation, confirmatory of what we say. And we must say, in view of every thing, that we barely enter our solemn protest against the intermarriages of our own people with other orders, especially in the case of females.

OUR MISSION TO PALESTINE.

As the day draws near when our missionaries are to sail to the land where the patriarchs rest, where the bones of the prophets are laid, let us as a denomination come up nobly to the work of fitting out our brethren and sisters, so that when once there, they may have every thing necessary, and give themselves wholly to the work.

The implements for agriculture in that country should be like our own; therefore, let our brethren who are farmers, and have on hand any spare farming tools, or who may suggest what may be needed and would be best to have purchased, at once inform the Committee how much they can furnish, &c.

Brothers who are carpenters, can you send us a saw, bit, or auger, or any tool which may be needed in the erection of buildings? Can not other mechanics render essential aid in this way, and not feel it themselves?

And then, again, our sisters are to be fitted out for keeping house and entertaining strangers; their home is not only to be the home of the Arab, but also of the kings and princes of the East who may visit that country. Therefore, let the sisters see what they can spare to render their home in Palestine pleasant and agreeable; and at once pack up, not only their chests, but also their wardrobe, and lay by for this purpose such useful articles as they can spare, and which may be needed.

Let us awake at once to the claims upon us, and let our missionaries have not only the needful articles, but the pleasing reflection, that the denomination enters heartily into the measures for sustaining the mission.

THE COMMITTEE.

THE SCHOOL AT SHILOH, N. J.

Shiloh, N. J., Nov. 3, 1853.

It is well known, as far as the community are acquainted with Shiloh, that a Classical School has been in operation here for five years past. It was established by the energetic and persevering labors of E. P. Larkin, and he had the charge of the school for three years. It was kept the first two years in the Lecture Room belonging to the congregation, with some private rooms for recitation and music. In 1850 the Seventh-day Baptist congregation built them a new house of worship, and gave the old house (being a substantial brick building) for educational purposes. It was fitted up at considerable expense for the convenience of the school, and has since been used for that purpose. An extensive scientific apparatus, with abundant material adapted to a full development of the sciences, has been procured. The last two years the school was under the instruction of Wm. C. Whitford and lady. They having left for other engagements and duties, the Trustees were successful in procuring the services of C. Rollin Birdick and lady, who are now in charge of the school, and who have thus far given very general satisfaction; and with the prospects we are somewhat encouraged. Though the number of students is not as large as would be desirable, it will be increased the winter term, which will commence December 15. They have employed Mr. Morton, who is a professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music, and master of the sciences. Should any of the young gentlemen and ladies from abroad wish to avail themselves of the advantages that our school affords, we would be happy to extend to them all its facilities. Believing that we have ample accommodations and competent teachers in all the branches to be taught, we do not hesitate in recommending it to the patronage of an enlightened public.

W. B. GILBERT.

THE RUPTURE BETWEEN TURKEY AND RUSSIA.—In the opinion of Mr. Layard, the great explorer of the ruins of Nineveh, as stated by him in Parliament, the disturbance between Russia and Turkey has had a good deal to do with the liberality of the Sultan towards the Christians of the Protestant faith in his Empire. The teaching of the American missionaries is felt, he says, more or less, in every considerable town in the Sultan's dominions. The converts were sometimes subjected to trials and persecutions from the heads of churches to which they originally belonged, until by the efforts of the British Minister they were recognized by the Porte as one of the religious sects of the Empire. As the spirit of religious inquiry extended among the Greeks, the Greek clergy became alarmed, and, backed by the Russian Mission, have done all in their power to check the movement; and the Czar being the head of the Greek church, has been endeavoring by his hostile exertions to take revenge on the Sultan for his commendable conduct towards Protestant sects.

A MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

"A Missionary Demonstration," so called, under the direction of young men connected with the Methodist denomination, was held on Fourth-day of last week, afternoon and evening, in Metropolitan Hall, New York. In the afternoon, the Hall was filled to overflowing, mostly with children, for whose special edification several addresses were delivered, they themselves doing the singing and taking up a handsome collection. In the evening, a large, intelligent, and enthusiastic audience, filled the Hall, and listened to missionary addresses by Bishop Waugh, Rev. Dr. Thompson, President of the Wesleyan University, Bishop Simpson, Rev. E. S. Foster, and Rev. Mr. Taylor. We copy from one of the daily papers a portion of the report of Bishop Simpson's address:—

Was the excitement caused by the demonstration of the day merely temporary, or did it possess those elements which would ensure its perpetuity? He believed that the missionary cause would prosper, even were it a purely human enterprise, because it is identified with many of the best instincts of humanity. Some of these instincts he enumerated: First, our Sociability. It is not possible for man to live alone—we find our chief pleasure in society. Christianity brought mankind together. Secondly, our Curiosity. All men were by nature inquisitive. Without constant communication this craving after knowledge could not be satisfied. The religion of Christ was a unit of angels. Thirdly, our Sympathy. We pity the suffering brethren. Thus was this holy feeling on our side.

Fourthly, our Love of the Heroic. A Missionary was a greater hero than Caesar or Alexander. But we had other prompters around and above us. Every day we were reminded of other nations. Our tables and our persons were covered and our stores were filled with foreign productions. Every advance of science brought us into nearer communion with our brethren abroad, both benighted and enlightened. The friends of science and literature, too, were interested in our cause; for a knowledge of the theories of Newton and Laplace, and the thoughts of our many literatures, followed the Missionary's footsteps. It was for the interest of science to bring men together, that thereby the intellects of the thinkers of all nations might be employed in extending the empire of Mind over Matter. Our great discoveries—of the Daguerreotype, for example, the electric telegraph, and the joint production of America, England, France, and Holland. In the world of matter, the greater number of plates that are put in an electric battery, the greater is the power acquired. So in the realm of reason. The greater number of minds that are brought to bear on any subject, the more rapidly is darkness dispelled from it. Christianity would unite the spiritual lights of the earth. From the North and South, from Europe and Australia, from Asia and America, and the isles of the sea, would the men of intellect come on a mission of death to spiritual darkness—dispelling and to dispel.

But besides these instincts and interests, we had stronger assurance of success; this, namely: Because the sovereignty of the Saviour requires it; because the heathen are his possession. God has said that even as He lives the whole world shall be full of His glory. Conquer it, then, young men, for God!

RELIGION IN CALIFORNIA.

Rev. J. H. Brayton recently delivered a lecture in New York on the religious condition of California, an abstract of which we find in one of the daily papers. The lecturer commenced by remarking that the finger of Providence was evidently concerned in the events which occurred in 1848 in connection with this western settlement. In that year a contract was made by the United States Government with the Pacific Steamship Company, for the transmission of mails. Early in May of the same year peace was declared with Mexico, and California became one of our possessions. In that or the succeeding week gold was discovered; and it was about this time that Missionaries commenced their work in that country, having arrived there before obtaining intelligence of that event.

It was in the Union Theological Seminary of New York that a fellow student first had his attention turned to that field as one that would hereafter become of great interest and importance. He, in company with a classmate, entered in the Home Missionary Society, and had just obtained the appointment to proceed thither, when the news of the discovery of gold reached this coast. There could be no clearer evidence of the direction of Providence in this matter, than that the population who rushed there at the cry of gold should be met by the preachers of the Gospel. Besides those who went from this part of the country, the Rev. Mr. Hunt, who had charge of a church at Honolulu on the Sandwich Islands, whose members flocked to San Francisco, joined in the missionary work in that city. This was the commencement of the missionary enterprise in California.

After describing the harbor and city of San Francisco, the lecturer proceeded to describe the land in the neighborhood as most beautiful and fertile. It was impossible to conceive of anything more exquisitely beautiful than those valleys, when adorned with all the verdure of spring. The slopes of the hills were covered with green, consisting either of wild oats or wild grass, studded here and there with proud and lofty trees, and richly interspersed with nature's choicest ornaments, flowers and shrubs. The country around the city, for fifteen or twenty miles, was of the most attractive character, and well adapted for villa residences and excellent farms.

One hundred and twenty miles up the Sacramento River stood the city of Sacramento; and along the coast for seven or eight hundred miles there was a country, bounded by the high mountain peaks on the north and the Sacramento valley on the south, which was hemmed in between the hills, and was overflowed during the winter and spring. On the San Joaquin River stood Stockton, and in addition to the principal towns were many smaller ones, rising in various parts of the country. Auburn and Colusa, where gold was first discovered, were places of considerable interest. At first, the inhabitants of these towns were exceedingly uncharitable, and their morals of the lowest description. But during the last five years, great improvements had been effected in this respect.

To the Rev. Mr. Taylor, a Methodist Missionary, was due the credit of being the first to raise his voice in the plaza of San Francisco, in the praise of the living God. He commenced first by giving out a hymn and singing it himself. This attracted the attention of the bystanders, and in a short time he was joined by a considerable number of that mixed population. He availed himself of the opportunity to proclaim to them the truths of the Gospel, and after continuous efforts, he succeeded in securing the attention of the more serious portion. This humble beginning was succeeded by more systematic efforts, and the establishment of a church. The Rev. Mr. Hunt soon commenced preaching in a small room in the same city, with services of a very simple nature. It was gratifying to see that now these cities and towns contained many churches, with their beautiful white spires, bearing substantial evidence of the success which has attended missionary labors in that country.

Cities and towns which a few years ago were composed of the humblest tents were now being constructed of substantial brick, and the streets were presenting so much the appearance of our own eastern cities, that were it not for the absence of friends and the superior character of the climate, it would be easy to imagine one's self at home.

During his stay in the country, Mr. Brayton had met with several instances of monotheism, or rather heathenish monism. One was that of an old gentleman from Philadelphia, who had conceived the idea of a revelation, made to him in a dream, of a lake with sands of gold, which he believed he should find somewhere between the hills. He succeeded in converting hundreds and thousands of people to his faith, who followed him over hills and through ravines several hundred miles, till at last, losing their confidence in their own prophet, they attempted to make him a martyr to his delusion. He, however, escaped from their violence, and his disciples returned to their homes.

The Sunday was observed there in a very different way from what he had been accustomed to. At one place where he was preaching he found that two auctioneers were rivaling him in their attractions. Some of the people would stand and listen to his preaching for some time, and then would divert their attention to the proceedings of the auctioneers, who were expending their eloquence in praise of the horses and cattle which were being exhibited before them.

There were nearly a hundred thousand Mexican Catholics, twenty-five thousand Chinese, and a vast number of various other nations, now resident in California; and, although the state of society there was bad—although gambling was carried on to a fearful extent, and other vices existed which were deeply to be deplored—these were being subdued by the influence of enlightened Christianity, and customs might be pronounced as better than either India, China, or any of the Pagan nations. Political corruption, however, was the most difficult to be removed. He believed that California would ere long become the great center of missionary operations for the conversion of the Pagan world. A few years ago it was difficult to find one in twenty of the settlers who did not intend to return to their homes, but now there were scarcely one in twenty who had not determined upon remaining there, finding that the seasons were pleasanter than in the Eastern States, and the scenery more inviting and more grand.

RELIGION AND TEMPERANCE.

The following excellent Resolves were unanimously adopted by the Southern Church of Western Pennsylvania at its late Synodical Convention at Lewistown, Mifflin Co.:

Whereas, Universal experience has proved Intemperance to be one of the giant evils of the world, spreading its baneful influence not only over the destinies of individuals, but also of families, of churches, and of nations; and whereas, the manufacture and traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage, which are the grand means of perpetuating this curse of humanity, have been legalized by legislative action and license, and all moral influence has, after ample experiment, been proved inadequate to the suppression of this evil; And whereas, an effort has for several years been in progress, by the philanthropists, patriots and Christians of our land, to exterminate it by prohibitory legal action, which a kind Providence has crowned with signal success in the State of Maine and elsewhere, reclaiming to his right mind the deluded inebriate, and spreading peace, joy, and domestic comfort, over multitudes of families before steeped in destitution, misery and degradation; therefore

Resolved, That this Synod cordially approves of the effort now in progress in our commonwealth to secure the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law, as the only effectual remedy for the curse of Intemperance.

Resolved, That in view of the solemn fact revealed to us in God's Holy Word, that "no drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of God," the responsibility for this evil is distinctly brought within the province of the Christian Ministry and Church, and that we, as Ministers and lay representatives of the church, will do everything in our power, by Christian and lawful means, to secure the enactment of such a law, and to promote and preserve such a state of public opinion as will secure its faithful execution when enacted.

BAPTIST CHURCH EXTENSION.—At the General Convention of Baptists, held in Troy last May, a resolution was adopted to enter upon the collection of a permanent fund for aiding feeble churches in the erection of edifices for public worship, and it was referred to the Home Mission Committee to devise a plan for the fund and its proper distribution. This Committee have recently matured their plan, which embraces among its features, proposals to make the fund in part permanent, using only the interest, and part circulating, as the donors shall designate; appropriations to be made only to make the last payment on any church edifice; and will be made either in the form of loans, or donations, according to circumstances. Before the appropriation is made, it is proposed to require that the church shall be finished, without any incumbrance, and will be kept insured for at least one half its value. The monies are to be collected as the ordinary Home Mission funds—contributions being available for making like members, &c. No specific time for collection is appointed, nor is any definite sum fixed upon—though the original action at Troy contemplated, we believe, the sum of $50,000. The Lutherans, it will be remembered, have resolved upon raising a fund of this description, $50,000. Thus the fourth denominational movement for this great want of the age is inaugurated.

MISSIONARY FAREWELL.—A party of Episcopal missionaries being about to sail for Shanghai, a farewell meeting was held in New York on the evening of the 4th instant. The party consists of Bishop and Mrs. Boone, J. T. Paine, Tong-Chu-King, Ne-Bee-Hoo (female), Miss Wray, and Miss Conover, the latter two now going out for the first time. Addresses were delivered by Bishops Wainwright and Hawes, Rev. Drs. Nevins and Hawkes, and Mr. Tong-Chu-King, native of China, and a convert to Christianity, who accompanied Bishop Boone on his visit hither. Mr. Tong is a very young man—we should think about 25—and was dressed in his native costume, and spoke in very good English, to the following effect:—

MY CHRISTIAN BROTHERS: I shall speak but a very few words. I am gratified to see what I see, and hear what I hear. I never expected, in my own country, to see such things. I have seen this country and I have seen its people. It is a great country, and the people are a wise people. They are not a wise people of themselves, but because they know God—the true God—the Christian's God. I was at one time an idolater; but now my eyes are open, and I see the great difference between Christianity and idolatry. I am now happy. My heart burns with love. I wish all my country people would know God and be happy. You have done much for us. I hope you will continue the ministrations of your ministry, and teach us—teach us salvation and sanctification. I have now seen and heard, and I shall go to the work, to which I have been called, with vigor and great strength. Now is the time to help my country. The Revolutionary movement there embraces the principles of Christianity. I thank you for what you have done. Do more.

Precious to the dismission of the congregation, plates for subscriptions in aid of the China Mission were passed round, and $650 were collected.

JAMES G. BIRNEY.—JAMES G. BIRNEY, once the Liberty-party candidate for the Presidency, is spending the autumn and winter in Philadelphia. Mr. B. owns a respectable property near East Saginaw, Mich. The Enterprise of that town says:—

"Something of the nature of a paralytic stroke has somewhat impeded the use of his limbs, and renders it difficult for him to articulate distinctly; yet he walks erect with dignity, and presents a very healthy and agreeable appearance. The profession of the law, in which he has stood eminent, he now devotes scarcely any attention to; though it is said that many of his neighbors are occasionally indebted to him for very valuable legal advice, for which no charge is made. Though a decided opponent to human Slavery, he is not the fanatic which many unacquainted with him take him to be. Mr. Birney's claims to the Presidency were not considered to be valid, nor do his views appear to meet with general favor; yet he is a very estimable man, or his neighbors are egregiously mistaken."

EMANCIPATION OF SLAVES.—A Maryland paper says that John Fisher, Esq., of Westminster, recently gave freedom to his entire lot of slaves, five in number, four of whom, with quite as much furniture and money as would satisfy approachable fastidious white folks, removed to Pennsylvania. One of these four was held in the highest estimation by Mr. F., and thousands of dollars would have been no inducement for her sale. The fifth remains at home, preferring the steady assurance of a proper administration to his wants in slavery, than to buffet the adversities of life with his freedom, although he is a stout, athletic and healthy man.

PETITIONS AGAINST NONRESISTANCE.—One of the most important and most popular subjects which has come before Parliament in the course of the present session, is that of the confinement of young females in the asylums. Without popular excitement, without public meetings or speeches, nearly five hundred petitions, signed by upwards of two hundred thousand persons, have been presented to the House of Commons on this question; and not only so, but the House itself has shown its perception of the importance of the subject, having twice debated the Government, in the presence of Lord John Russell himself, on this very question.

FOR SENATOR, NATHAN V. HULL.—Such an announcement we find among the Free Democratic State Nominations, under the editorial head of the General Valley Free Press of Nov. 21. Whether there is any prospect that this nomination will result in the temporary transfer of Edw. Hall's services from the Church to the State, we are not informed.

THE MAINE LAW IN WISCONSIN.—A letter from Edw. Stillman Coon, dated Milton, Wis., Oct. 26, 1853, says:—

"Our State is all aflutter on the question of the Maine Law. Mass meetings and lectures in its favor are as frequent almost as the weekly roll round, in nearly every village in the State. We are very sanguine that there will be a great majority in favor of the law."

PASTORAL CHANGE.—Edw. James Bailey has removed from Little Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., and taken the pastoral care of the church at Plainfield, N. J., where he preached last Sabbath.

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.—A Washington paper says that the organization of Nebraska, under a territorial government, can hardly fail to become one of the most important questions in issue before Congress at the next session. Immediately on the borders of Missouri and Iowa, the soil and agricultural advantages generally, including the supply of timber, are undoubtedly very fine, probably equalling those of any of the new States. As one goes west, however, the timber decreases, so that much of the territory is almost totally unfit for cultivation on account of its scarcity. Some of its tribes settled there are utterly opposed to being moved West, quoting Gen. Jackson's pledge given when they were located there, "that the country should be theirs while water runs and trees grow," in answer to persuasions to sell. Some few are willing to sell out entirely to the United States, while others will make a treaty of cession for part of their land. At present, the wild Indians are bitterly opposed to Col. Benson's project of turning upon them squatters from Missouri and Iowa, in opposition to the command of the Government of the United States; while the half breeds and civilized Indians, anticipating the such intruders cannot much longer be kept out, are becoming anxious for the prompt organization of a regular Territorial Government, which may have sufficient strength for the enforcement of the laws of the United States in that quarter.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A Baptist Theological Seminary has just been opened at Fairmount, near Cincinnati, a new Gothic edifice having been erected for it at a cost of $25,000. It is located on the summit of one of the highest hills in the vicinity of the city, and in full view of Cincinnati, Lexington and Newport. Tuition is free to candidates for the ministry, and to approved applicants needing assistance an appropriation of $40 per annum will be made by the Baptist Educational Society. The professors are all qualified ministers of the Gospel.

Rev. J. B. Burke, a Congregationalist, recently from Scotland, who has been supplying the Methodist pulpit at Shelburne Falls, Mass., for the past few months, has become a Baptist, and on a recent Sabbath gave his reasons for his change of sentiment at the Baptist Church in that place. He will then be baptized by Rev. E. H. Gray, in the presence of a large concourse of people. He will be recognized as a Baptist minister by public services.

Rev. Jean Vernier, having visited France and Switzerland for the purpose, has obtained two or three ministers of Christ, and five or six missionary schoolmasters, to labor among the French Catholics in Canada. A spirit of inquiry, says Rev. Mr. Wilkes, is awaking here and there among the more educated classes; the fifth of some in Rome is shaken; the youth particularly, in instances not a few are thoughtful and desirous to know the truth. Surely, the Lord has purposes of mercy toward Popery-ridden French Canada.

"The people of Massachusetts," says Mr. Hotchkiss, "think the Maine law is too strict. But the Chockwags can put a stricter on a stricter, and still sustain it. It is now possible with a fine of three dollars to bring a bottle of liquor into the nation. The penalty for the second offense is five dollars, and for the third ten dollars. These fines have been demanded and paid, principally by the poor. The General Council will make the penalty for the first offense twenty-five dollars, and for the second, fifty. This shows where the grip is."

From reports presented at the Universal General Convention held at Columbus, Ohio last month, it appears that this denomination has at the present time in the United States 1,097 societies, 836 houses of worship, 517 preachers, 20 periodicals, 10 academies of schools, 118 ecclesiastical associations, including State Conventions, Missionary, Tract and Educational Societies.

New York Market—November 2, 1888.

We have three days later news from Europe, a summary of which we give below.

by way of New Orleans, we have California news to Oct. 16th. Time between San

There are in the Classical Course, 100 Seniors, 100 Juniors, 108 Sophomores, and 132 Freshmen—total, 394.

They did yesterday (says the N. Y. Times) within a stone's throw of our Office.

was too happy in the sphere where it had gone to return to the cares and pains incident to the flesh, and she was buried.

SUMMARY.
A Washington paper says that the Po-

For continuance in the case of Lewis, an alleged fugitive slave, the negro slipped out of court and escaped, the audience cheering as he left the door.

Hutchinson, and one other ancient New England family, now residing in England, a

Don	Florida Luckey	2 00	10 22
of	Charles Card, Woonahburg	2 00	10 22
the	Albert G Hardick, Corvax	1 00	10 28
	FOR EXTENT-DAY SUFFERER MEMORIAL:
	Mary Ann Babcock	$1 00	Grace Ann Dunn	$1 00
	WILLIAM M. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Flora and Fauna—Flora 2 00 Set. Creation.

Miss P. West, Albion, Wis. for Palestine
A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer

Form of a Bequest to our Societies.
 "I bequeath to my Executors the sum of _____ lars, in trust, to pay over the same, to _____ most

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	28	29	30	31	32	33	34	35	36	37	38	39	40	41	42	43	44	45	46	47	48	49	50	51	52	53	54	55	56	57	58	59	60	61	62	63	64	65	66	67	68	69	70	71	72	73	74	75	76	77	78	79	80	81	82	83	84	85	86	87	88	89	90	91	92	93	94	95	96	97	98	99	100	101	102	103	104	105	106	107	108	109	110	111	112	113	114	115	116	117	118	119	120	121	122	123	124	125	126	127	128	129	130	131	132	133	134	135	136	137	138	139	140	141	142	143	144	145	146	147	148	149	150	151	152	153	154	155	156	157	158	159	160	161	162	163	164	165	166	167	168	169	170	171	172	173	174	175	176	177	178	179	180	181	182	183	184	185	186	187	188	189	190	191	192	193	194	195	196	197	198	199	200	201	202	203	204	205	206	207	208	209	210	211	212	213	214	215	216	217	218	219	220	221	222	223	224	225	226	227	228	229	230	231	232	233	234	235	236	237	238	239	240	241	242	243	244	245	246	247	248	249	250	251	252	253	254	255	256	257	258	259	260	261	262	263	264	265	266	267	268	269	270	271	272	273	274	275	276	277	278	279	280	281	282	283	284	285	286	287	288	289	290	291	292	293	294	295	296	297	298	299	300	301	302	303	304	305	306	307	308	309	310	311	312	313	314	315	316	317	318	319	320	321	322	323	324	325	326	327	328	329	330	331	332	333	334	335	336	337	338	339	340	341	342	343	344	345	346	347	348	349	350	351	352	353	354	355	356	357	358	359	360	361	362	363	364	365	366	367	368	369	370	371	372	373	374	375	376	377	378	379	380	381	382	383	384	385	386	387	388	389	390	391	392	393	394	395	396	397	398	399	400	401	402	403	404	405	406	407	408	409	410	411	412	413	414	415	416	417	418	419	420	421	422	423	424	425	426	427	428	429	430	431	432	433	434	435	436	437	438	439	440	441	442	443	444	445	446	447	448	449	450	451	452	453	454	455	456	457	458	459	460	461	462	463	464	465	466
---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----	-----

1000

Logical Seminary

10 acad
associations,
Missionary, Tr

1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 26

THE

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 17, 1853.

By HON. J. H. HARRIS, Governor of the State of N. Y.

THURSDAY, the twenty-fourth day of November, 1853. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th inst., in relation to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of this State, and in reply to inform you that the same has been referred to the Committee on the Constitution, and that they have reported thereon to the Senate on the 10th inst. The Senate has also referred the same to a Committee on the Constitution, and they have reported thereon to the Senate on the 10th inst. The Senate has also referred the same to a Committee on the Constitution, and they have reported thereon to the Senate on the 10th inst.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT AS AFFECTED BY MIXED MARRIAGES.

In these days of "Woman's Rights," it is somewhat hazardous to say any thing of the authority of the sterner sex; but, for the confirmation of what we set forth last week, and in order to impress the minds of our females more deeply with the inexpediency of political alliances with the observance of the law, we say plainly, that "the head of the man is the man," and that, if she fills the place as a wife should, she will honor the government which her husband exercises over her. It is true, he has no right to establish a government at variance with the law of God. Every principle of moral rectitude binds him to exercise his authority in strict accordance with the Scriptures; and should he command his wife to do an act manifestly sinful, she might lawfully refuse to obey. But it could be remembered, that for the abuse of the authority the husband is responsible to his wife, but to God, on the principle that every subordinate officer is responsible to the governor that entrusts him with authority, and not to those who are placed under him. And though the wife may refuse to obey in all those cases where obedience would conflict with her direct personal responsibility as a subject of God's moral government, she must not suppose herself entitled to do so in other cases.

In regard to the case under consideration, the most that a wife can claim is the privilege of laying aside her ordinary work on the Sabbath, and consecrating the time to religious purposes. If, in addition, she claims the privilege of working on Sunday, she claims what the husband may, if he see fit, refuse to allow. It is possible, that he may regard the first day of the week as the divinely-appointed Sabbath of the Gospel. This, at any rate, is the doctrine, and there are thousands of believers in it. He may suppose, that the Fourth Commandment binds him to observe the first day of the week to keep it holy; so, he is bound to see that every member of his family ceases to labor on that day; for the commandment lays its injunction upon him with regard to them all—son and daughter, man-servant and maid-servant, cattle and the stranger dwelling within his gates. And though the wife is not particularly named in these specifications, it is because the law of God takes it for granted that the husband and wife are both one, and equally interested in seeing that the commandment is complied with. Hence, where the husband does not see that the first day of the week is the Sabbath, and enjoins upon his household to observe it as such, the wife's duty is to obey. It may be burdensome for her to keep the Sabbath every week, but it is a burden which she must bear. She must keep one day for reverence towards God—a matter in which she is personally responsible—another out of respect to her husband's authority.

We have no sympathy with those who would encourage the wife to disobey in this matter. That the husband is in error as to his views, is nothing to the point. Her obedience is not an endorsement of his doctrine; it is simply an act of respect to the authority which God has given him over her. And reason teaches that in every community, large or small, the supreme authority must be vested somewhere. There cannot be two kings to one kingdom, nor two suns to the solar system, nor two heads to any community. The family is a little community; and though there ought not to be difference of views in regard to what will be the order and regulations of the family, though husband and wife ought to agree in this matter; yet, if difference should arise, there must of necessity be some ultimate authority, from which there shall be no appeal. And both Scripture and the common sense of mankind have vested this authority in the husband and father. On any other principle family government could not exist.

We admit that in regard to family government, especially as regard to moulding the characters of the children, a heavy responsibility rests upon the wife. If she is a sensible woman, a Christian, she will feel this responsibility, and will weigh upon her most oppressively. It is in connection with this keen sense of responsibility, that conscience is liable to take on morbid action. In the notion that she is directly and personally responsible for the souls of religion in which she educates her children, the wife sometimes feels constrained to fly directly in the face of her husband's authority, and to prescribe forms which she knows that he disapproves. On this point we feel how difficult it is to express ourselves in such a way as will not be liable to misconstruction. Perhaps a case referred to in the New Testament will help us a little.

It is related (Acts 16) that, when Paul came to Derbe and Lystra, he found a disciple named Timothy. The mother of this Timothy was a Jewess, but his father, it seems, was a Greek. Notwithstanding Timothy was a full grown man, (or, at all events, old enough to be a believer in Christ,) he had never been circumcised. Now, as his mother was a Jewess, and of course held under a responsibility in common with all other Jewish mothers to train her children in the way of God's commandments, why was this omission? Why did she not, in the exercise of her maternal responsibility, present him to the Lord according to the ritual of the Hebrew law? Had not God said, "Every man child among you shall be circumcised?" Was not the law on this point as imperative as that on Sabbath-keeping, or any other? How could she reconcile it to her conscience to disregard so plain, so positive a command? Still, Timothy had not been circumcised; and the only reason assigned for this omission is that his father was not a Jew—that he was a Greek. And this explanation of the matter is presented in such a way as to show that it was not a singular case, for which the mother was responsible, but that it belonged to a class of cases where one uniform rule applied. For as Paul circumcised him "because of the Jews that were in those quarters," the fair presumption is, that he would not have circumcised him, had not his uncle-circumcision been a fact too notorious to be hid from the Jews. Yet the only way in which the Jews are represented as knowing anything about it was by his parents; "for they all knew that his father was a Greek."

Now the practical inference furnished by this account is this: That the father is the lawful head and governor of his own family; that his authority in this respect is so sacred, that it must not be interfered with by the mother, even for the sake of a divinely prescribed form with regard to the dedication of her children; and that this was a universally admitted principle with the Jews of old. Yet, clear as this principle is, so markedly sensitive are the consciences of some, that they can never rest till they have performed an act of direct rebellion against the father's authority, under the mistaken notion that otherwise they could not answer their duty to God! We have heard of Pedobaptist mothers offering their children in baptism, in defiance of the express prohibition of the fathers, and of Pedobaptist ministers that encouraged them to do so.

Clearly, the authority is with the husband and father. And if Seventh-day Baptist women will become the wives of Sunday-keepers, we shall not pity them a great deal if they find themselves burdened with the keeping of two days in the week instead of one. Nor shall we wonder if, as family cares increase, they find the burden too heavy to bear; for this will very probably be the case; and at last, worn out and discouraged, they will forsake the Lord's Sabbath to keep that of their husbands. We say again, that our protest is against the intermarriages of our females with the men of other orders.

TRUST IN GOD.

God is the Creator and Preserver of all things. Man is among the created and preserved. God is independent—man is dependent. God is self-existent—man is conditionally, contingently-existent. God is omnipotent—man is finite in power. God is omniscient—man is finite in wisdom—a wisdom that is foolishness without God. God is omnipresent—man's sphere is but limited. God is infinitely holy and happy—man is unholy and unhappy. All of the attributes of God are undesired and unconditioned—those of man derived and conditioned. These relations are fully and incidentally taught by revelation. Our reason and experience also bear testimony to the truthfulness of his teachings.

These relations imply, as a natural and legitimate consequence, watchfulness and protection on the part of God—confidence and trust on the part of man. Confidence implies genuineness of spirit—a harmony of aims and pursuits—a reciprocal love. We trust our fellow man implicitly, unless there is this harmony, this genuineness, this love; much less can we repose full confidence in God without this intimate spiritual relationship. This lies at the foundation of all trust. We must also possess that filial regard and esteem which will enable us to look up to God as our Father—feeling that he is infinite in love and wisdom, and will lead us, and preserve and bless us, as his children. This will give a ready submission to His laws—a willingness to be guided by His providences—a cheerful resignation to His will. Happy is the man who is earnestly and cheerfully working out his mission in that sphere—amid those relations of life where he has been placed by an over-ruling Providence. He that reposes implicit confidence in God, will manifest a willingness, a readiness, to fall in with and adopt the plan of salvation which Infinite Wisdom has seen fit to provide for man—a willingness to submit, not only his temporal, but also his eternal interests, to God. Growing out of this, there will be a readiness, a desire, to labor in carrying forward the great plan of salvation, and in bringing others to partake of its benefits.

Blessed are the results of such a trust to the individual himself. It gives power over evil and change and temptation. It gives permanency, stability—gives a life above worldly things—a higher and purer life than inherited from earthly motives or trust. To walk humbly and carefully before God—to be patient amid trial and suffering—to be zealous and persevering in every good work—to be constant in prayer and praise—to have a confident looking forward to eternity for the rewards of life and as the home of the righteous—are characteristic of him who trusts implicitly in God as his Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer.

Though various life holds our way,
While walking life's uncertain road,
In this we trust—to Thee we pray,
Our Saviour and eternal Lord.

AUTUMN.

When the first breeze of Spring dances over my face, and whispers in my ear of budding flowers, unfettered streams, and genial sunshine, my heart leaps up with wild delight, and bounds away to meet the coming, soul-refreshing blessings.

When Summer, with her many-toned voice of music, greets me, and invites me forth rejoicing in her matured beauty, the hearted-ness of my response is but the echo of her own gladness.

But when the low deep breath of Autumn steals over me, like the last faint sigh of a departing spirit, and I recognize in the deepened tint on Nature's cheek the token of coming decay, and note each changing expression as I would watch the countenance of a dying friend, my soul is thrilled with a sacred sadness, yet mingled with a deep and holy joy. Autumn! dreamy, hazy—Autumn! with thy delicate sky-tints, thy rich golden sunlight, and thy time-softened beauties! My spirit does thee homage.

Who has traced the farewell beams of Summer's beauty, lingering around the brow of Autumn, like a faint halo of glory, and watched each receding gleam as it fades from view, and not felt his soul gradually free itself from its earth-binding, and soar away upward, and upward, as if on a Heaven-inspired mission, until it has caught a far-off glimpse of those yet unrevealed glories of the upper world, and there revealed in dream-like bliss, such bliss perhaps as the fully-freed spirit knows in its heavenward flight!

There's a freshness in Spring, that is exhilarating; there's a beauty in Summer, that is ennobling; but there's a glory in Autumn, that is soul-subduing.

OUR PALESTINE MISSION.

"The Committee on Outfit" would suggest, that among the articles contributed for the needy in Palestine, to be dispensed by our brethren as circumstances may require, we should have a good supply of the following articles:—

DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING.—Chiefly comprising coarse woolen and cotton fabrics, suitable for the destitute Jewish laborer who may be employed in the garden, or for others in like circumstances; a quantity of trimmings, sewing cotton, and linen thread; a quantity of coarse strong articles of clothing, of all sizes and descriptions, including shoes.

FARMING UTENSILS, TOOLS, &c.—A general assortment of farming and garden implements and seeds; two side-saddles, a number of bridles, one or two sets of double ploughing harness, a quantity of grain bags and bagging, a few casks, kegs, and buckets (pails), a quantity of tin ware, common cloth for floors, some blacksmith tools, also carpenter tools, nails of all sizes, pieces of steel, iron, hinges, screws, door and window fastenings, a small quantity of paints, oil and varnish, and brushes. These things cannot be procured there, without difficulty; others may be suggested by the experienced house-keepers and gardeners.

The offerings of our brethren to the land of Judea should be stimulated by the example of the Good Samaritans whose contributions were carried to the poor of Jerusalem by the Apostle Paul. Our contribution to the poor will not be lost. Let us give in the name of Christ, who has left gracious promises to those who give to the needy. "Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor," "so shall thou have treasure in heaven." Remember, the Jews are beloved for the fathers' sakes, and they are not now the less beloved because our fathers have persecuted and destroyed them in all the earth. Let our missionary brethren now have the means of softening the rigor of the cruelty the afflicted sons of Israel have hitherto experienced at the hands of professed Christians.

An astonishing number were saved in the days of Christ and the Apostles, and may be still; for though their national organization and government have received their just award from the hand of God, yet He is so respectful of persons, that he should delight in their temporal sufferings, any more than in the wretchedness of Gentiles in this or other lands.

We do not design to give the poor their food and clothing, and leave them in their wretchedness when our gifts are exhausted in their hands, but to make the little tokens of our regard useful in a higher degree, by placing them in circumstances to earn their own bread by the labor of their own hands, and thus be enabled to shake off the shackles of a dependence far more intolerable than the burden of the poor in our own land.

We hope our contributions will be but, as a drop in the bucket to the good that will be effected by the faithful, judicious benevolent and Christian instruction in the arts of life which our missionaries will be able to impart.

The views and feelings of the denomination in regard to Palestine have been very clearly indicated by the receipts for that object published in the Recorder. Accompanying the donations of our brethren, our agents speak of deep feeling, fervent prayers, and solemn pledges, in behalf of our mission, which encourage us to hope that our people have a heart, and that they will, the Lord helping them, work in this enterprise. As an evidence of the interest or tone of feeling in various sections, we give the following extracts from letters received by Bro. Jones.

From a brother in the Central Association, enclosing a resolution of his church respecting the Palestine Mission:—

"I hope some measure will be adopted to give employment and bread to those who may wish it, as I believe our usefulness would be greatly enhanced thereby, and the philanthropy and the true mission of the Gospel be more readily appreciated, and more practically explained."

The Resolution of the Church:—

Resolved, That the full mission of Christianity should be exhibited by an Industrial Institution being connected with our efforts, that the inquiries after truth may be protected from physical sufferings by that means."

The brother adds:—

"As far as I am informed, this sentiment prevails in this section of the denomination."

From a brother in Slidoh:—

"We read with much interest and pleasure your letter in last week's Recorder, describing your visit West, and the hospitality and liberality of the people in that region. We can hardly realize, though I suppose it is a fact, that you and Mrs. J. and M. are soon to leave this country for the land of Palestine. We feel very much as we did when Bro. Carpenter was about to leave for China—a kind of reluctance to part with you. But I know we should rejoice that there are those amongst us who are willing to forego the pleasures of home and kindred, and the society of friends, for the purpose of advancing the cause of the Redeemer. May the blessing of the Lord be upon you, and upon this enterprise."

The following was accompanied by a donation in favor of this mission:—

"May the rich blessing of Heaven accompany you and Bro. Sanders to that land of inexpressible deeper interest than any other land, save the 'land of pure delight!'"

"Truly yours, GRANT SMITH."

The day of sailing is not yet fixed; but the passage of our brethren will be engaged by the Committee by the first vessel; therefore all things should be ready. THE COMMITTEE.

SABBATH LECTURES.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

A recent article, headed "Tract Distribution," which appeared in the columns of the Recorder, seems rather to oppose Sabbath Lectures, and to adopt in their stead colportage and tract distribution. Without detracting from the last two, as efficient agencies in the work of Sabbath reform, may not the other be undervalued? And may not the same objections which the writer of "Tract Distribution" urges against lectures, be made against public preaching? He says:—

"Sometimes, it is true, a public argument is valuable; but in the majority of instances, people prefer, upon a question that involves a complete revolution of their practice, to think the matter over quietly, without being subjected to the chafings of dispute, or to such importunities as one who earnestly maintains his argument is likely to employ. They want to take time for consideration; the subject is new to them."

Now, in this objection, what is there which may not with equal propriety be said against the public preaching of the gospel, or of almost any other subject, as Temperance, Slavery, War, or any reform? When Christ preached certain truths, many complained that he reproached them—that his doctrine was hard—that he stirred up the people. Peter's pentecostal lectures caused the fury of the priesthood; Stephen's argument chafed his hearers exceedingly; and Felix asked for time to consider. And yet there is no intimation that either Christ, Peter, Stephen, or Paul, who argued the point well, and delivered lectures to the people as they were, thought of any more quiet or unobtrusive way, because the subject was new. They pressed home to the heart and conscience the truth, although they knew full well that the doctrine they taught involved a complete revolution of practice in those who heard.

And who does not know, that the preaching of the gospel, even now, involves a complete revolution of practice in the world in many things? Not the gospel which is preached, and enters to public opinion, but such a gospel as would deliver the captive, restore to its rightful owner the fertile plains of Montezuma, beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. Let the true gospel of the Son of God be preached now, and many will prefer a more quiet and unobtrusive way. The fact seems to me, that any kind of movement which agitates community is to be shunned. For one, I am not prepared to admit that the millennium is already quite so near as that ministers can with safety lay aside their armor, or retire from the arena of conflict, or that the devil is so far chained and imprisoned as to warrant the conclusion that mere amiability will succeed in shutting the bottomless pit upon him.

Now, while prudence and discretion may be the better part of valor, and it might be often better to have one who knows how to hold his tongue, yet to cry aloud and spare not—to lift up one's voice like a trumpet, for the purpose of showing the people of God their transgressions—may still be demanded.

If the Sabbath be of that importance which one would suppose, from the prominence given to it, both in the Bible and in the editorial of the Recorder, it is not of sufficient importance to employ in its defense the best talent of the denomination—men who can argue the point well, and are competent to deliver lectures as they go? How often is an educated ministry, a competent ministry, urged upon the consideration of our people, as necessary to the preaching of the gospel. And yet, the advocacy and defense of a question which has drawn around it the talent, learning, ingenuity, and sophistry of centuries, is to be left to a few amiable brethren in the distribution of tracts. Far from me to detract from tract distribution, or amiability of character, or prayers in secret places. There is evidently an impression, somewhat prevalent, that any thing like disputation must be unfavorable to piety, devotion, or religion. I would inquire, whether such be the fact. Does not that notion arise from a sickly sentimentalism, which has so far pervaded community, that it demands a gospel of the character of a generalization, without any particular application?

S. S. GANNETT.

P. S.—At some future time I propose to give a short account of some Sabbath Lectures in Jefferson County, N. Y., by Elders Crandall and Sawyer, the former an agent of the American Sabbath Tract Society.

THE SULTAN AND THE PROTESTANTS.

It has been asserted, on high authority, that one cause of the rupture between Russia and Turkey is the leniency of the latter power towards Protestants residing within its dominions. If so, the triumph or defeat of the Sultan is vitally connected with the interests of Protestantism. The following "Firman of the Sultan," granted in favor of his Protestant subjects, indicates a very liberal and correct sentiment on his part:—

Most honored vizier, illustrious councillor, maintainer of the good order of the world, director of public affairs with wisdom and judgment, accomplisher of the important transactions of mankind with intelligence and good sense, coordinator of the edifice of empire and of glory, endowed by the Most High with abundant gifts, and Moushir, at this time, of my gate of felicity, my Vizier Mohamed Pasha, may God be pleased to preserve him long in exalted dignity.

Let it be known on the receipt of this my noble firman, that—Whereas, those of my Christian subjects who have embraced the Protestant faith, have suffered inconveniences and difficulties, in consequence of their not having been hitherto placed under a separate and special jurisdiction; and in consequence of the Patriarch and Primates of their old creeds, which they have abandoned, not being naturally able to administer their affairs. Whereas, in necessary accordance with my imperial solicitude and benevolence toward all classes of my subjects, it is contrary to my imperial pleasure that any class of them should be exposed to trouble. And whereas, by reason of their faith, the aforesaid Protestants form a separate community. It is in consequence my royal pleasure, that measures be taken for the sole purpose of facilitating the administration of their affairs, so that they may live in peace, quiet and security. Let then a respectable and trustworthy person, chosen by themselves from among their own number, be appointed, with the title of "Agent of the Protestants," to be attached to the Department of the Minister of Police. It shall be the duty of the agent to take charge of the register of the members of the community, and which is to be kept at the police department. The agent is to register therein all births and deaths. All applications for passports and marriage licenses, and on those special affairs of the community which are to come before the Sublime Porte, or any other department, are to be made under the official seal of the agent.

The precept royal and august edict has been especially granted and issued from my Imperial chancery, for carrying my pleasure into execution. Hence then, the above-indicated Moushir, shall carry the preceding ordinance into scrupulous execution, conformably with the explanations given. As, however, the assessment of taxes and the delivery of passports are subject to specific regulations, thou shalt not permit anything to be done in contravention thereto. Thou shalt not suffer any tax or harash to be required of the Protestants, for marriage licenses or for registration. Thou shalt be careful that, like unto the other communities of the empire, every facility and required assistance be afforded to them in all their affairs, and in all matters concerning their cemeteries and places of worship. Thou shalt not permit any interference whatsoever, on the part of any other community, with their rights or with their religious concerns, nor, in short, with any of their affairs, either secular or religious, in any manner whatsoever; in order that they may be enabled to exercise the unages of their faith in security. Thou shalt not suffer them to be molested one day in three or in any other matters; and thou shalt be careful and attentive to maintain them in the desired quiet and security. They are to be permitted to make those representations to the Sublime Porte which it may be necessary to make concerning their affairs, through their agent. After thou hast taken due cognizance of these matters, thou shalt cause the present noble receipt to be registered in the proper quarter, and shalt cause it to be confirmed in the possession of the aforesaid subjects, and thou shalt be careful that the high provisions thereof be always carried into due execution. Thus be it known unto thee, giving full credence to the Imperial signet. Done in the second decade of the sacred month of Moharrem, in the year of the Hegira 1264, at Constantinople the well-guarded. (Sultan's Signature.)

THANKSGIVING.—In Maine, Thanksgiving occurs to-day, Nov. 17. In each of the following named States it occurs on the 24th inst, viz:—New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, Alabama, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin.

S. S. GANNETT, having returned from his visit to Honesdale, requests his correspondents to address him at Mystic Bridge, Ct.

EVANGELICAL LABORS IN IRELAND.

Under date of London, August 11, 1853, the British correspondent of the New York Evangelist gives the following account of an effort in the way of volunteer preaching in Ireland:—

The spiritual destitution of Ireland has long engaged the thoughts of some of the leading members of the Evangelical Alliance, and Dr. Steane, one of its Honorary Secretaries, having recently visited that country, conceived the idea that an extemporary mission to the Southern counties—Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, Kilkenny, and Waterford—might be productive of signal benefits. The plan was for one hundred ministers to preach the gospel for a month, both on the Sabbath and on other days, throughout that district. The good doctor imagined that the gospel preached by ministers from England and Scotland, and of different denominations, would exhibit a united Protestantism, which would remove the reproach of sectarian division, and come with greater weight upon the public mind as a united testimony. It was proposed that each minister engaged should preach five sermons a week, which, in the month, would be an aggregate of two thousand sermons. The voluntary services of a hundred British ministers were secured, and a large sum for their traveling expenses raised, and the last Sunday in July was the day appointed to commence the enterprise. The associated brethren went forth "two and two" to their respective stations, but have been met in all the large towns by the most brutal levity, insolence, and persecution. At Limerick, a mob of 3,000 people assailed them; and the whole police force of the district was scarcely equal to keep them from being torn in pieces by the ruffians. Going before the magistrates, the majority of whom were Romanists, not a sentence was elicited from the bench in condemnation of so cowardly an attack. A Roman Catholic barrister was allowed to say, without proof, "These men may blame their situation some of them have not received the cross of martyrdom—and that the logmen aim at not dragging the river for their bodies this morning." Bursts of savage laughter followed these murderous suggestions. At Waterford, the ministers were treated with the same barbarity; they accordingly published a placard, headed "Liberty of Speech," and appealed to the Irish, as the professed friends of civil and religious liberty, to give them fair play. One passage of the address I transcribe, as worthy of regard on both sides of the Atlantic: "Little did the friends of freedom imagine, when contending for the political emancipation of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, that they were placing power in the hands of those that would foster their own interests, and would not act on the Christian principle of doing unto others as they wish others to do unto them." But even this did not moderate their violence, and they were obliged to retire before the storm. At Nenag, according to the testimony of a Roman Catholic paper, "much boasting and boasting were indulged, and some mud was thrown; and in the jostling that took place, one of the saints' was crowned with a dung-basket!" In Clonmel, the capital of Tipperary, the brethren were met with similar treatment. A crowd of at least 4,000 persons assembled, and the moment Dr. Gordon began to read the Scriptures, a scene of hissing, yelling, grunting, totally indescribable, ensued. Small stones, cabbage, and other missiles, were thrown, and the ministers were rescued from the greatest peril by the efforts of the police. Such is the religious liberty the Papists of Ireland allow to Protestant Dissenters, who helped them to gain their political freedom! Several of our brethren have returned in disgust. The tone of exaltation in the Papish journals is most intolerant and insulting. They rejoice in these brutal attacks, much as the craftsmen of Ephesus did at the persecution of Paul. But these excesses, whether in Ireland or Canada, cannot fail to work for the furtherance of the gospel, in spite of the malignant hostility of its enemies.

SUNDAY ALWAYS.—By different nations every day in the week is set apart for public worship; Sunday by Christians; Monday by the Greeks; Tuesday by the Persians; Wednesday by the Assyrians; Thursday by the Egyptians; Friday by the Turks; Saturday by the Jews. Add to this the diurnal revolutions, and it is apparent that every moment is Sunday somewhere.

The above paragraph is going the rounds of the papers. By some persons it is regarded as evincing the folly of insisting upon one particular day of the week as the Sabbath, to the exclusion of all the others. To us, however, it evinces the necessity of insisting upon that the importance of uniformity in the matter of sabbath-keeping, is generally admitted. But how is uniformity to be attained? Not by allowing each man, or each nation, to determine what particular day shall be observed; but by following the directions of One, who has a right to dictate to all men and all nations. God has said, "The seventh day is the Sabbath—in it thou shalt do no work." Universal obedience to that command would produce all desirable uniformity, as the practice of Jews in different parts of the world proves. General disobedience to that command has produced the confusion above alluded to.

GERRIT SMITH.—A letter of Gerrit Smith to W. L. Crandall, dated, Peterboro, Nov. 6, says:—

"Your letter finds me suffering under a rush of blood to the head. It is a fortnight since the disease began. I fear that it may disqualify me for my official duties."

To this a Syracuse paper adds:—

"If the prayers and deep regrets of millions can avail, Mr. Smith's fears will prove groundless, and he will be in his seat at the opening of Congress."

"ALL RIGHT."—The following extract from a business letter of Eld. N. V. Hall will relieve the minds of any of our readers who were apprehensive that the churches were to be deprived of the labors of that brother:—

"Election is over, and I am elected to stay at home—by a large majority. All right."

A Methodist Missionary is to leave soon for Norway.

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

We have one week later news from Europe the substance of which will be found below.

A frightful accident happened on the River Mersey, near Trenchard's Wharf, on the 21st ult., by which nearly 40 persons perished. In consequence of the Mersey having overflowed its banks, a number of hop-pickers, after having finished their day's work, were being conveyed through the flood in a wagon drawn by three horses, when, on arriving at Hartlepool Bridge, they became alarmed at the rush of water, and uttered loud cries. The party consisted of men, women and children. The men, who were in the wagon, were in contact with the side of the bridge, which, being in a dilapidated state, broke down, and the wagon was precipitated into the river, and all the persons in it drowned. Thirty-seven persons were missing.

A telegraphic dispatch gives news of the 17th from the Turkish frontier. At that date no act of hostility had taken place. The Russian and Ottoman Generals were concentrating their troops, and Omar Pasha appeared to be preparing to cross the Danube.

A telegraphic dispatch published in the Paris Monitor, dated Bucharest, 25th October, states that two Russian steamers with eight gunboats forced the passage of the Danube on the 23d, and encountered a brisk fire from the Turkish fort at Isakli, between Reut and Ismail. The Russians had one colored, three officers, and twelve sailors killed, and forty wounded, but pretend that they set the fort on fire by a shell.

A letter from St. Petersburg of the 14th October, states that news of the declaration of war by the Porte had produced a painful sensation, and the character of the Czar, adds the writer, is not of a nature to bend when a challenge is offered to him. In the north of Russia the army and the civil officers are for war, while the reports from the south were more pacific. The movement of troops and the stagnation of trade had depressed public opinion. No warlike enthusiasm had displayed itself, although various official publications had been circulated to inflame it. The population to the south of Moscow desired peace. The soldiers and Commissaries alone called for war.

Notwithstanding all the unfavorable symptoms, public opinion, both in London and Paris, had taken a favorable turn. The belief was pretty generally advanced, that the resources of diplomacy were not all exhausted, and that whatever may be the real or affected irritation of the Emperor Nicholas, Europe will be saved the horrors of war. Turkey and Russia may be permitted to exchange blows, but it was thought the mediating powers would still be able to prevent them from merging into extended hostilities, or a general war on the Continent.

The overland India, China and Australian mails had arrived with dates from Calcutta, Sept. 29, Hong Kong, Sept. 9, and San Luis Obispo, Cal. They were arrested, tried and convicted, by the citizens of Los Angeles, but the Spanish citizens outnumbered in the meeting the Americans, who wished to hang the prisoners. The Californians were opposed to Lynch law, and it is said were determined to resist its execution at all costs. The meeting then determined to send the prisoners to San Luis Obispo, where the crimes were committed. The prisoners were accordingly sent by the steamer Goliath to that place, and immediately upon their arrival they were seized and hung by a party of Americans, who were on the beach.

Every six years, by law, there is a revaluation of the real estate of Ohio for taxation. The last valuation was in 1847, when the taxable property of the State, at cash values, amounted to about $475,000,000. The returns for the new valuation are nearly complete, and the Auditor of State estimates that they will vary but slightly from $800,000,000; showing an increase of taxables in six years of $325,000,000, or nearly 70 per cent. Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kentucky and Tennessee will probably show an equal increase in the same period. A large part of this increase may be justly imputed to the completion of the railroads in the West, every one of which, now in operation, is paying largely.

Three fugitive slaves, from Virginia, passed through Elmira, N. Y., recently, on their way to Canada. They belonged, originally, to a gentleman of Richmond; but on his death were given their freedom, on condition they would emigrate to Africa. This they refused to do, and as they were immediately hired out to different individuals, by their present owners. Fearful that they might be sold to some planter down South, they resolved to run off. When they arrived at Elmira, they were almost naked, and without shoes to their feet, but through the liberality of some of their colored friends, they were comfortably clad, and sent on their way rejoicing.

A dispatch dated Washington, Nov. 3, 1853, says:—Application has been made to this government to annex Honduras to the United States, but no answer has yet been returned. The Hondurasers are rather bothered by their war with Guatemala and the controversy they have on hand with England about the Bay Islands and other matters. They accordingly would like to transfer themselves to the United States, and as an inducement offer a country very rich in silver and other metals, and possessing the most advantageous line for an inter-oceanic railroad that can be found out of the United States.

The earnings of the Milwaukee and Mississippi Railroad in October, 1853, were $9,732 for passengers, and $31,065 for freight, making a total of $40,797. The earnings in the same month of 1852 were $15,073. In October last year the Road was in operation in Whitewater, 50 miles from Milwaukee. It is now running to Janesville, 70 miles from Milwaukee. The increase is nearly 200 per cent. over that of October, 1852. An additional section of the Road to Stoughton, Dane County, 18 miles further, will be completed during the next week.

We learn from the New Hampshire Telegraph, that C. G. Atherton, U. S. Senator, was taken with a paralytic stroke, while in the Court at Manchester, on Thursday, and at the last account his left side was paralyzed, and he was unable to talk. While engaged in conversation, he was observed to falter, and said that he was faint. He was led out of the Court Room, but before reaching his hotel he had lost the use of one side entirely, and was obliged to be carried.

"SUNDAY CORN."—Under this head a correspondent of the Boston Investigator, a paper devoted to the development and promotion of universal mental liberty, gives the following suggestive paragraph:—"My two acres of Sunday Corn, that I planted to raise for the purpose of buying liberal books with the proceeds of the sale, have not been sown yet, but I think it will yield about seventy bushels per acre. It stands about twelve feet high, and all the work upon it was done on Sunday. I don't see but what Nature of Providence has smiled upon my Sunday work, though the priests tell us that no labor performed on that day ever prospers. My two acres of corn tell another story."

NEW YORK STATE ELECTION.—The New York State Election resulted in the choice of a Legislature which, it is believed, will recognize the necessity of passing a Prohibitory Liquor Law. The following are the State Officers elected:—
RICHARD W. LEITCH, Governor, Secretary of State, Syracuse.
JAMES M. COOK, Comptroller, Buffalo.
SAMUEL G. BRANTLEY, Treasurer, Buffalo.
GEORGE HARRIS, Attorney General, New York City.
CONRADUS GARDNER, Canal Com., Amsterdam.
JOHN T. CLARK, State Engineer, Utica.
THOMAS HARRIS, Prison Inspector, Albany.
ROBERT F. HARRISON, Clerk of Appellate, Genesee.
The Judge of Appeals are GEORGE H. HARRISON, Fonghtledge, and HENRY DEANE, Utica.

TAX SALE AT ALBANY.—We have received (says the N. Y. Tribune) a catalogue of 400 pages, indicating an immense number of lots of land in all parts of the State, now sold, or about to be sold, for arrears of taxes, at the Capital at Albany. The sale commenced on Wednesday, the 5th instant, and must occupy all of the present and most of the coming month. This is a very extensive sale, the last by the State under the old law. The first day was devoted to sales of lots in the City and County of Albany, and nearly completed, the purchase being confined to Chester Park and William D. Cornell, of Albany; Ex-Mayor Baldwin of Syracuse; City of Albany; and a few others. The amount of tax due on any one parcel is generally small, and the average bids were about 50-100ths of the property advertised for the tax; to be paid within 68 hours; subject to redemption within two years, by payment of costs, with tax and 10 per cent. interest.

"THE MURDER CHAIR."—Under this head, the N. Y. Tribune says that there are now waiting for trial for murder before the Court of Oyer and Terminer in this City, eighteen persons! The worst feature in the matter is, that the prisoners are described generally as respectable looking men. Their names are: Louis DeCora, for shooting Eugene Melville; Cornelius Collins, Timothy Hogan, James McAdie, and Albert A. Bogart, for killing William Stafford, in French's Hotel; James Smith, for stabbing James Davis; James Fox, William Dixon, John Wade, and Edmund Mahoney, for killing Henry Osborne; James L. Hoare, causing the death of Susan McAnany; Woodson Anderson, colored man, for killing John Brangan; Thomas Kine, for killing his wife with an axe—said to be a lunatic; John Dozier, for killing Patrick McNally; Charles Thomas, for killing Michael Lawler; John Price, for killing Samuel Freeman; Augustus Krenator, for killing John Daniel Kottling; Henry Cornell, for murder. There were during a period of a year lately as many murders, save two, committed in the City of New York as were in all England in the same period!

SUMMARY.

Three persons, two Spaniards and one Californian, accused of murder and robbery, were hung by Lynch law, on the 9th Oct., at San Luis Obispo, Cal. They were arrested, tried and convicted, by the citizens of Los Angeles, but the Spanish citizens outnumbered in the meeting the Americans, who wished to hang the prisoners. The Californians were opposed to Lynch law, and it is said were determined to resist its execution at all costs. The meeting then determined to send the prisoners to San Luis Obispo, where the crimes were committed. The prisoners were accordingly sent by the steamer Goliath to that place, and immediately upon their arrival they were seized and hung by a party of Americans, who were on the beach.

A German woman in Chicago was recently killed by being struck on the head by a large ball with which some persons were playing in a garden by which the woman was passing. Her husband said the owner of the garden for $5,000 damages, sustained by the loss of his wife. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of Illinois, upon the question whether or not the owner of the garden should be liable under the circumstances. The opinion of the Court was in the affirmative.

A contract has been made with a heavy English railroad firm to construct a plank road across the Ithaca of Telescopio, which is to be completed within one year; to be followed by a railroad, to be finished within three years. All the arrangements are made for a prompt commencement of both works. Santa Anna is to receive a bonus of a million or so for the right of way.

A great combination of patentees is said to be on foot, to obtain from Congress a renewal of their several grants. Among them is the Woodworth Planing Machine—the Goodspeed India Rubber patent—the Morse Telegraph patent, and other heavy interests. It is said that half a million of dollars has been pledged to ease the passage of the various schemes through Congress.

A letter dated Remedios, Cuba, October 11th, says that in the limited and sparsely populated district between Manzanilla and a point below Sagua la Grande, 29 leagues in extent, 13,000 slaves have been carried off by the cholera, according to the official accounts, which are known to be under the mark. The attacks were very short, some of them only lasting an hour.

H. Dwight, Jr., a New York broker and western railroad operator, stopped payment a few days ago. Two or three Banks, with which he was connected, are great sufferers, and may have to suspend on account of his failure. The Bank of Madison, Ohio, has already suspended. The Bank of Oswego, N. Y., is a sufferer, but will be able to stand it.

Among the deaths that the religious community are called to mourn, stands prominent that of Rev. Charles Hall, D. D., the senior secretary of the American Home Missionary Society. He died at his residence in Newark, N. J., on Monday, the 11th ult., at the age of 55 years. He has been identified with the Home Missionary Society almost from its commencement.

Rev. Messrs. Tracy, Little and Scott, with their wives, embarked from Boston on the 27th ult., in the Pleistocene, Capt. Woodall, for Madras. Messrs. Tracy and Little are members of the Madras Mission, under the care of the American Board, and now return to a field in which they have already spent some years.

Rev. Henry Newcomb is preparing a Cyclopaedia of Minnesota, to contain 700 or 800 pages large octavo, at $2. It is to be published, as soon as one thousand subscribers are obtained, by Charles Scribner, and with the recommendation of the American Board.

The Commissioners in the case of the Northern Indiana and Chicago Railroad Company vs. the Illinois Central Railroad Company, have decided that the track of the Central Railroad Company shall cross the track of the complainants at the same point as hitherto, but that the crossing shall be by means of a bridge, which shall be built by the defendants at least eighteen feet in the clear above the surface of the rails of the complainants. The bridge must be built immediately, and until finished the railroad of the defendants will be allowed to cross the track at grade.

The Peter's Republicans say: One of the most valuable discoveries of mineral, perhaps, ever found in this prolific lead region, has recently been made by a couple of German miners, named Gilber and Pihnerick, near Preston Point, about two miles east of Potomac. The lead is owned by Governor Dewey; we are informed from forty to fifty thousand pounds of mineral can easily be taken out in one day. The discoverers have already been offered one thousand dollars for a third, which they refused.

On Cleveland's Cleveland and Pittsburgh Express train, a singular accident occurred. Mr. Albree, a favorite engineer, was running the train, when, near Yellow Creek, a span of beams sprang upon a bridge, their feet falling between the ties, and they left helpless. The train was too close upon them to hope for successful backing, and the signal was given for speed. The train passed over the beams, cutting them into mince-meat, and, thanks to the good judgment of those in management, the train and passengers were uninjured.

A dispatch dated Buffalo, Monday, Nov. 2, 1853, says the suspension of Patchin's Bank is announced. It was bought out by large loans to the Buffalo and New York City Railroad Company, whose officers, under the stringency of the money market, are severely embarrassed. Mr. Patchin, the President of the Bank, is also the President of the Railroad, and has assumed liabilities which, in consequence of the difficulty in disposing of the Bonds and Securities of the Road, has resulted in the disbarment of the Bank. The Bank, however, abundantly secured with the Banking Department.

Dr. Noe, President of Union College, has been forty-nine years at the head of that institution, and at the dinner of the Alumni, held on the 10th of October, he was presented with a diploma of the Alumni. His son, Wm. Taylor of New York, reminded his fellow graduates that next year was the fiftieth of Dr. Noe's occupancy of the chair. He suggested the commemoration of this semi-centennial Presidency, in some suitable manner. The suggestion was warmly received and responded to, and a committee appointed to carry it out.

An affecting death occurred in San Francisco on the 10th October. A Spanish mother missed her child only a year old. She supposed that it had lost itself in the street, and advertised for it, but could learn nothing. On the 12th, she had occasion to open her chamber wood-trunk, and there lay her child, dead. It had fallen into the trunk, and in trying to get out pulled down the lid, which closed with a spring and fitted so closely that the child had smothered to death.

A dreadful accident occurred a few miles below Boston, Pa., the other day. A number of men were engaged in blasting rocks; the powder being damp did not go off as soon as was expected, and the men, thinking the march had been extinguished, returned to their posts, when the explosion took place. One man was instantly killed, his head being blown entirely off. Three others were seriously, and it is feared fatally, injured.

A German woman in Chicago was recently killed by being struck on the head by a large ball with which some persons were playing in a garden by which the woman was passing. Her husband said the owner of the garden for $5,000 damages, sustained by the loss of his wife. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of Illinois, upon the question whether or not the owner of the garden should be liable under the circumstances. The opinion of the Court was in the affirmative.

A dispatch dated New Orleans, Friday, Nov. 4, 1853, says: A schooner just arrived from Yucatan, reports that the cholera is raging terribly in Yucatan. At Merida, the deaths averaged 100 daily. Later dates say it is abating.

A gentleman of Boston has offered to give $50,000 to the Town of Braintree, for the formation of a public library there, provided the town will raise an equal amount to be appropriated to the same purpose.

David Kennison, a private in the Revolution, and receiving a pension at the Albany Agency, under the act of March 18, 1816, died on the 24th February, 1853, aged 112 years!

A Father or Cougar was shot at Lee, N. H., about ten miles from Portsmouth, by Mr. Wm. P. Chapman, who was hunting for foxes. The creature weighed 160 lbs., and measured over seven feet from his nose to the end of his tail.

During the past week, Peter Mackay, Jan. Langhlin, and J. McNeill, porter-house proprietors in Brooklyn, were each fined $100 for violating the ordinance in selling liquor on Sunday. They were examined before Mayor Lambert.

Last Sabbath (Saturday) evening, as a party of young men were returning from a partying excursion, their boat upset, on the Dols river near New Castle, and three of them were drowned.

Such has been the increase of California correspondence that the number of letters passing through the mail this year will not be less than 5,000,000. Last year the number was 4,400,000.

The quotations for Land Warrants are:—
100 acre Warrants $180 3182
20 acre Warrants 90 93
40 acre Warrants 45 47
A dispatch dated Boston, Saturday, Nov. 5, 1853, says: The powder-mill of Mr. Bemis, Spencer, Mass., blew up yesterday, instantly killing five men, four Englishmen and one Irishman.

In the list of arrivals from California last week, we notice the names of Paul Sellman of New York, and Dr. Albert Uster of New London, Ct.

The Bank of the State of New York, in this city, was robbed, a short time ago, of $24,000, which some admit thief took from the counter during business hours.

The Pacific Bank, of Buffalo, stopped payment last week. There will be but little if any loss to bill-holders.

Two of the boxes received from California by the last arrival by the American Exchange Bank, upon being opened at the Mint, were found to contain shot instead of gold. The deficiency is probably about $50,000, and where the abstraction took place cannot, as yet, be even guessed. Measures have been taken to trace the matter back, and endeavor to discover the robbers.

A few drops of carbonate of ammonia, in a small quantity of warm rain water, will prove a safe and easy antacid, &c., and will change if carefully applied, discolored spots upon carpets, and indeed all spots, whether produced by acids or alkalis. If one has the misfortune to have a carpet injured by white-wash, this will immediately restore it.

A accident occurred at the iron mines in Salisbury, Conn., at the bed known as the "Chaffed Bed," on Tuesday, 8th instant, by which two men lost their lives—one an Irishman by the name of James McDuffy, and the other, an estimable citizen, Mr. Harry Vought, who leaves a family. It was caused by the falling of a back of earth where they were digging.

Schooner S. P. Barham, Capt. Atwood, from the Bay of St. Lawrence, for Gloucester, was struck by a heavy sea, off Gasconade, in a gale, and thrown on barren ends. Capt. Atwood and four of the crew were washed overboard and lost. The remaining crew got the vessel into Tremont, Me. Capt. Atwood was a worthy citizen of Rockport. He leaves a wife and two children.

An affray took place at Newport, Ky., on the 27th ult., between Mayor Harris and R. McCracken, President of the Council of that City. Harris fired twice, without effect, when McCracken knocked him down, and beat him so badly that his recovery was doubtful. Mr. McCracken was tried before an examining Court and acquitted.

The wide track from Paterson to Jersey City having been completed, the change of cars at the former place will be dispensed with, and passengers over the Erie route will be taken from Jersey City to Danbury or Buffalo on the wide gauge.

The towns of Green Bay, Wisconsin, was visited by a destructive fire recently, which consumed some thirty buildings, including three warehouses, the United States Hotel, the Advocate's office, &c., entailing a total loss of about $100,000, which is only partially insured.

Two young negro slaves killed their master, Wm. Kearney, of Caldwell County, Ky., a few days since. He was about to punish one of them, when the other came up and threw a rope over his head, and then both pulled on the ends of the rope until he was choked to death.

The wife of the Rev. William Butler, a Methodist clergyman in Westfield, Mass., was walking across the room last Friday, when she suddenly uttered a scream, and fell lifeless on the floor. She was twenty-two years of age, and is supposed to have died of disease of the heart.

A monument is in process of erection at Hampton Falls, N. H., to commemorate the memory of Mabel Ware, the first President of the Colony and State of New Hampshire, who held his office through the whole of the Revolutionary War.

The Chicago Tribune of the 7th, states that it received telegraphic dispatch from Quincy, informing them that thirteen negroes, men, women, and children, had left Marion County, Missouri, by the underground railroad, for parts unknown.

Our readers will remember the story of the good fortune of Isaac Butler, a poor but worthy man in Vernon, Canada county, who was to have a legacy of $24,000 left him in Europe. It turns out that after living in anticipation for several weeks, it is reduced to the pitiful sum of $24, instead of $24,000.

A dispatch dated New Orleans, Friday, Nov. 4, 1853, says: A schooner just arrived from Yucatan, reports that the cholera is raging terribly in Yucatan. At Merida, the deaths averaged 100 daily. Later dates say it is abating.

A gentleman of Boston has offered to give $50,000 to the Town of Braintree, for the formation of a public library there, provided the town will raise an equal amount to be appropriated to the same purpose.

David Kennison, a private in the Revolution, and receiving a pension at the Albany Agency, under the act of March 18, 1816, died on the 24th February, 1853, aged 112 years!

A Father or Cougar was shot at Lee, N. H., about ten miles from Portsmouth, by Mr. Wm. P. Chapman, who was hunting for foxes. The creature weighed 160 lbs., and measured over seven feet from his nose to the end of his tail.

During the past week, Peter Mackay, Jan. Langhlin, and J. McNeill, porter-house proprietors in Brooklyn, were each fined $100 for violating the ordinance in selling liquor on Sunday. They were examined before Mayor Lambert.

Last Sabbath (Saturday) evening, as a party of young men were returning from a partying excursion, their boat upset, on the Dols river near New Castle, and three of them were drowned.

Such has been the increase of California correspondence that the number of letters passing through the mail this year will not be less than 5,000,000. Last year the number was 4,400,000.

The quotations for Land Warrants are:—
100 acre Warrants $180 3182
20 acre Warrants 90 93
40 acre Warrants 45 47
A dispatch dated Boston, Saturday, Nov. 5, 1853, says: The powder-mill of Mr. Bemis, Spencer, Mass., blew up yesterday, instantly killing five men, four Englishmen and one Irishman.

In the list of arrivals from California last week, we notice the names of Paul Sellman of New York, and Dr. Albert Uster of New London, Ct.

The Bank of the State of New York, in this city, was robbed, a short time ago, of $24,000, which some admit thief took from the counter during business hours.

The Pacific Bank, of Buffalo, stopped payment last week. There will be but little if any loss to bill-holders.

The weather on the upper Mississippi, about the 27th of October, was severely cold. The Galena Advertiser of the 28th states that the morning previous the river there was frozen over!

Hollow axles are being extensively adopted on the London and North Western Railway. It is found that they are double the strength of a solid axle, and of course are more economical.

The Grand Jury of Wilkesbarre have found a true bill against United States-Marshal Wykooop and Crossman, for attempting the arrest of the slave "Bill," some time since.

Miss Dr. Harriet K. Hunt has again paid her taxes in Boston, with a protest against forcing persons to pay taxes who can have no voice in their imposition.

Rev. Mr. Rittenhouse, while officiating at the consecration of a Church at Washingtonville, Pa., on Friday morning, suddenly fell down dead.

The Washington County Post, of the 10th, announces that the Albany and Rutland Railroad sent its first regular train forward on Saturday the 5th inst.

The total amount of gold from California deposited at the Philadelphia Mint since the discovery up to July 20, 1853, was $208,886, 023.

There are now surviving about fourteen hundred revolutionary pensioners, all of whom are regularly drawing their pensions from the treasury of the United States.

Two bright-eyed little boys, one aged two and the other about five years—sons of a Mr. Horton, of Boston—died a few days since from eating candy which had been colored with some poisonous substance.

About fifty barrels of wine from native grapes will be made in Dan Molines county, Iowa, this fall; and hereafter farmers will turn their attention to the culture of the grape.

Bartholomew Bates, the "Rowland Hill" of America, died in Boston Mr. Bates was well known throughout the country for his labors in the cause of cheap postage.

Since the 1st of January there have been shipped from Boston 181,000 cases of boots and shoes, being 20,489 cases more than during the corresponding period of last year.

Explorations show that the coast of Greenland is rich in copper; silver and lead mines have also been discovered.

The Governor of Pennsylvania has appointed the fourth Thursday in November, (24th) as a day of public Thanksgiving in that State.

The American Institute has fallen behind to the amount of $7,000, on the receipts of the late Fair at Castle Garden.

Archbishop Hughes has brought an action for slander against the proprietors of the Episcopal Recorder of Philadelphia.

It was said by Mr. Spear, in a lecture a month since in San Francisco, that the Chinese there intended to erect an altar for idol worship.

The Romish Society for the Propagation of the Faith, has, in six months, sent eighteen missionaries from France to Asia.

On the 24th inst. thirty members of the Tennessee House of Representatives presented a petition for a prohibitory Liquor Law.

New York Market—November 14, 1853.

Wheat—No. 1, 1 1/2; No. 2, 1 1/4; No. 3, 1 1/4; No. 4, 1 1/4; No. 5, 1 1/4; No. 6, 1 1/4; No. 7, 1 1/4; No. 8, 1 1/4; No. 9, 1 1/4; No. 10, 1 1/4; No. 11, 1 1/4; No. 12, 1 1/4; No. 13, 1 1/4; No. 14, 1 1/4; No. 15, 1 1/4; No. 16, 1 1/4; No. 17, 1 1/4; No. 18, 1 1/4; No. 19, 1 1/4; No. 20, 1 1/4; No. 21, 1 1/4; No. 22, 1 1/4; No. 23, 1 1/4; No. 24, 1 1/4; No. 25, 1 1/4; No. 26, 1 1/4; No. 27, 1 1/4; No. 28, 1 1/4; No. 29, 1 1/4; No. 30, 1 1/4; No. 31, 1 1/4; No. 32, 1 1/4; No. 33, 1 1/4; No. 34, 1 1/4; No. 35, 1 1/4; No. 36, 1 1/4; No. 37, 1 1/4; No. 38, 1 1/4; No. 39, 1 1/4; No. 40, 1 1/4; No. 41, 1 1/4; No. 42, 1 1/4; No. 43, 1 1/4; No. 44, 1 1/4; No. 45, 1 1/4; No. 46, 1 1/4; No. 47, 1 1/4; No. 48, 1 1/4; No. 49, 1 1/4; No. 50, 1 1/4; No. 51, 1 1/4; No. 52, 1 1/4; No. 53, 1 1/4; No. 54, 1 1/4; No. 55, 1 1/4; No. 56, 1 1/4; No. 57, 1 1/4; No. 58, 1 1/4; No. 59, 1 1/4; No. 60, 1 1/4; No. 61, 1 1/4; No. 62, 1 1/4; No. 63, 1 1/4; No. 64, 1 1/4; No. 65, 1 1/4; No. 66, 1 1/4; No. 67, 1 1/4; No. 68, 1 1/4; No. 69, 1 1/4; No. 70, 1 1/4; No. 71, 1 1/4; No. 72, 1 1/4; No. 73, 1 1/4; No. 74, 1 1/4; No. 75, 1 1/4; No. 76, 1 1/4; No. 77, 1 1/4; No. 78, 1 1/4; No. 79, 1 1/4; No. 80, 1 1/4; No. 81, 1 1/4; No. 82, 1 1/4; No. 83, 1 1/4; No. 84, 1 1/4; No. 85, 1 1/4; No. 86, 1 1/4; No. 87, 1 1/4; No. 88, 1 1/4; No. 89, 1 1/4; No. 90, 1 1/4; No. 91, 1 1/4; No. 92, 1 1/4; No. 93, 1 1/4; No. 94, 1 1/4; No. 95, 1 1/4; No. 96, 1 1/4; No. 97, 1 1/4; No. 98, 1 1/4; No. 99, 1 1/4; No. 100, 1 1/4; No. 101, 1 1/4; No. 102, 1 1/4; No. 103, 1 1/4; No. 104, 1 1/4; No. 105, 1 1/4; No. 106, 1 1/4; No. 107, 1 1/4; No. 108, 1 1/4; No. 109, 1 1/4; No. 110, 1 1/4; No. 111, 1 1/4; No. 112, 1 1/4; No. 113, 1 1/4; No. 114, 1 1/4; No. 115, 1 1/4; No. 116, 1 1/4; No. 117, 1 1/4; No. 118, 1 1/4; No. 119, 1 1/4; No. 120, 1 1/4; No. 121, 1 1/4; No. 122, 1 1/4; No. 123, 1 1/4; No. 124, 1 1/4; No. 125, 1 1/4; No. 126, 1 1/4; No. 127, 1 1/4; No. 128, 1 1/4; No. 129, 1 1/4; No. 130, 1 1/4; No. 131, 1 1/4; No. 132, 1 1/4; No. 133, 1 1/4; No. 134, 1 1/4; No. 135, 1 1/4; No. 136, 1 1/4; No. 137, 1 1/4; No. 138, 1 1/4; No. 139, 1 1/4; No. 140, 1 1/4; No. 141, 1 1/4; No. 142, 1 1/4; No. 143, 1 1/4; No. 144, 1 1/4; No. 145, 1 1/4; No. 146, 1 1/4; No. 147, 1 1/4; No. 148, 1 1/4; No. 149, 1 1/4; No. 150, 1 1/4; No. 151, 1 1/4; No. 152, 1 1/4; No. 153, 1 1/4; No. 154, 1 1/4; No. 155, 1 1/4; No. 156, 1 1/4; No. 157, 1 1/4; No. 158, 1 1/4; No. 159, 1 1/4; No. 160, 1 1/4; No. 161, 1 1/4; No. 162, 1 1/4; No. 163, 1 1/4; No. 164, 1 1/4; No. 165, 1 1/4; No. 166, 1 1/4; No. 167, 1 1/4; No. 168, 1 1/4; No. 169, 1 1/4; No. 170, 1 1/4; No. 171, 1 1/4; No. 172, 1 1/4; No. 173, 1 1/4; No. 174, 1 1/4; No. 175, 1 1/4; No. 176, 1 1/4; No. 177, 1 1/4; No. 178, 1 1/4; No. 179, 1 1/4; No. 180, 1 1/4; No. 181, 1 1/4; No. 182, 1 1/4; No. 183, 1 1/4; No. 184, 1 1/4; No. 185, 1 1/

The Fight from Dawn

My interview with my friend was again renewed in the evening, and in rather a different phase, which does not promise to open peacefully; but to-morrow will tell. At present I am too tired, having been up all day from an early hour—and here we are, to our pistols loaded, our swords ready at hand, armed men and ambulances patrolling the deck guns loaded, and trained and cast loose;—we lie down to sleep to-night in the neighborhood of 10,000,000 of men, brute, eternal

It is well to remark here, that they have been making the most extensive preparation of forts, &c., lately, as is evident by their new works, and those not yet finished. Doubtless there are full 1,000 boats, averaging, with rowers and soldiers, 25 men. In these waters we have seen, and could have counted; 500 some on the water, their banners flying.

Who would have thought, six years ago that the laws of the States of the Union would have to be published in English and Chinese for general circulation? Yet it is so. The ninth session of an act passed by the California Legislature for the collection of the foreign miner's tax has been printed in the Chinese language, for the information of more than thirty thousand Chinese in the new State. Tong-k Achick, a Chinaman, certifies that the translation is "faithful and good."

contains some very remarkable statistics respecting the population of Great Britain, which we condense thus:—

"Next to the birth of British Ambassadors at Paris, I suppose that the post of correspondent to the London Times is most to be desired. Let me rehearse a few of the immunities and privileges of that individual. His salary is $5,000 a year. He has a handsome suite of rooms, furnished and paid for by the paper. He has two clerks constantly in his employ, who read the French journals, translate, collate, cut out items from Galignani, and add their eyes, invention, experience, and observation to his. These gentlemen are paid by the Times, of course. The correspondent buys and charges to the paper any books of which he may stand in need—and the library is a very choice and complete collection of standard authors, cyclopedias, dictionaries, and other books of reference. He

The amount of money in active circulation in the United States is estimated in the Merchants' Magazine at $295,477,287, which, reckoning the population at 25,000,000, would make $12 per head. It was $11 in 1816 and, but $5.50 in 1800.

For every sq. ft. of 14 days or less—see insertion.
75	100
100	150
150	200
200	250
250	300
300	350
350	400
400	450
450	500
500	550
550	600
600	650
650	700
700	750
750	800
800	850
850	900
900	950
950	1000
1000	1050
1050	1100
1100	1150
1150	1200
1200	1250
1250	1300
1300	1350
1350	1400
1400	1450
1450	1500
1500	1550
1550	1600
1600	1650
1650	1700
1700	1750
1750	1800
1800	1850
1850	1900
1900	1950
1950	2000
2000	2050
2050	2100
2100	2150
2150	2200
2200	2250
2250	2300
2300	2350
2350	2400
2400	2450
2450	2500
2500	2550
2550	2600
2600	2650
2650	2700
2700	2750
2750	2800
2800	2850
2850	2900
2900	2950
2950	3000
3000	3050
3050	3100
3100	3150
3150	3200
3200	3250
3250	3300
3300	3350
3350	3400
3400	3450
3450	3500
3500	3550
3550	3600
3600	3650
3650	3700
3700	3750
3750	3800
3800	3850
3850	3900
3900	3950
3950	4000
4000	4050
4050	4100
4100	4150
4150	4200
4200	4250
4250	4300
4300	4350
4350	4400
4400	4450
4450	4500
4500	4550
4550	4600
4600	4650
4650	4700
4700	4750
4750	4800
4800	4850
4850	4900
4900	4950
4950	5000
5000	5050
5050	5100
5100	5150
5150	5200
5200	5250
5250	5300
5300	5350
5350	5400
5400	5450
5450	5500
5500	5550
5550	5600
5600	5650
5650	5700
5700	5750
5750	5800
5800	5850
5850	5900
5900	5950
5950	6000
6000	6050
6050	6100
6100	6150
6150	6200
6200	6250
6250	6300
6300	6350
6350	6400
6400	6450
6450	6500
6500	6550
6550	6600
6600	6650
6650	6700
6700	6750
6750	6800
6800	6850
6850	6900
6900	6950
6950	7000
7000	7050
7050	7100
7100	7150
7150	7200
7200	7250
7250	7300
7300	7350
7350	7400
7400	7450
7450	7500
7500	7550
7550	7600
7600	76

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOS. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. X.—NO. 24.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1853.

WHOLE NO. 492.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.
THE NOBILITY OF CHRISTIANITY.

THE NOBILITY OF CHRISTIANITY.
BY WILLIAM M. FARRINGTON, D.D.

The noblest of all the law of retaliation, is an inherent instinct of animal nature. It is seen in insects, in fishes, in quadrupeds, and, in its worst form, in bipeds—in man; because we look for better things in rational beings, and because he has greater facilities to enforce his malevolence.

In reference to the human family it is, sometimes, denominated savage nature, in opposition to civilized life, and, theologically, it is called the natural man, in contradistinction to regenerate man, or the carnal mind, in opposition to the spiritual mind, or spiritually minded.

Man is constituted with animal propensities in common with the lower animals; and while he acts from his impulses, alone, he is an animal, in every sense of the word, and not anything more than an animal; he is, also, endowed with intellectual faculties, to raise him above brute nature, and to enable him to discover the properties of life, and fashion his course after a higher standard; this is intellectual man, without the true ennobling power; and he is, likewise, blessed above all the rest of creation, with moral sentiments, to prompt him to kindly feelings—to exercise benevolence, to live justly, and to overcome the selfishness of the animal propensities; this constitutes the moral man.

The appropriate training of these natural faculties of the human mind may, of themselves, render man just and peaceable, so long as this is not any thing of great moment to war with his feelings and thwart his interests. Yet, notwithstanding the perfection of these natural endowments, they leave man, a natural man, earthy, as the Scriptures style it. Man may be just and kind at one moment, and passionate and perverse at another, so long as he is controlled by natural emotions. To become a perfect man, he must be transformed by regenerating grace—the spirit of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the new birth—the beginning of spiritual life; the life that enables man to engage in the life that raises him above the law, groveling, and ever varying impulses of the natural man—the principle that makes man God-like. This is, emphatically, the final purpose of our probation on earth.

This new-life can only be derived from a spiritual source, and that from the one legitimate source, the Spirit of Grace, as revealed in the spiritual dispensation of the New Testament. The old dispensation was adapted to the natural man; and though, mainly, a religious code, yet its principles were only suited to the carnal mind, and it was justly called "the ministration of death." It was throughout founded on the lex talionis—life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe. Exod. 21: 23-25. It was but the forerunner, the inkling, not the perfection, of the spiritual system—it was, simply, our school-master to qualify us for a spiritual dispensation.

The genuine spiritual life produces a new, regenerate manifestation of our natural endowments. Christianity does not confer new faculties, but rebukes the evil propensities of man, and gives all his powers their proper direction, namely, to glorify the Author and Finisher of our faith. Christianity did not confer new faculties on Peter; he was the same impetuous Peter, after his conversion, that he was before, but it gave him the right direction, to serve the living God, save in one instance, when he fell back on the pusillanimity of his own natural corruption. John's affection was not created by Christianity, but it was sublimated, by the Spirit of Grace, to intense devotion to his beloved Master. And Paul, energetic, driving Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews, the foremost in maligning and persecuting the disciples of the lowly Jesus, when he was converted to Christianity, had no new faculty of veneration, or conscientiousness, added to his mental constitution, but had them set right, by "the renewing of his mind," and, immediately, he bestowed the same vigorous energies he had formerly displayed, to the furtherance of the Gospel, with like ardor and enthusiasm that he previously persecuted the saints. And so it is with Christianity in the present day. Grace is a superadded principle, to give a new impulse, a new direction, to our natural faculties, now to be moulded and controlled by a sense of redeeming grace; but the great error, in regenerated man, is his not applying himself to the task of appreciating and carrying out the high and ennobling principles of that spiritual economy, with which his heart has been imbued. Man is too content with the smallest modicum of spiritual life; and, therefore, we seldom find any great displays of the true nobility of Christianity—greater conformity, more perfect assimilation to our Exemplar—becoming more self-decying, more self-sacrificing, more God-like.

The great distinguishing feature of the two covenants—the covenant of works and the covenant of grace—is, that in the former the injured, do this and live, it is imperatively demanded, while in the latter we are directed to look unto Jesus, who was made a sin-offering for us—the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth—while, under the former, every man looked unto his own things, under the latter, we are instructed, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man look, also, on the things of others"—"rejoice with those that do rejoice, and weep with those that weep"—and while the law tallies with the ruling principle of the former, charity and forgiveness are the peculiar features of the latter—even to pray for your enemies, and do good unto those who despitefully use you. Christianity, instead of regarding self, is ever instilling nobler impulses, as the correct motive to action, in the hearts of its disciples.

Various are the estimates placed on true nobility in the world. Brink and fortune form infinitely the greater proportion of the so-called noble men and noble women of earth. A hero, a successful military chieftain, who brings his trophies of bloodshed from the battle-field, becomes titled, in most countries, and takes rank with the exclusive in regal comeliness, while the truly heroic, in private life, those who devote themselves to the welfare of their race, facilitate the progress of improvement, ameliorate the condition of their fellow creatures, wear out their strength and their lives in prolonged researches into the mysteries of science and the evils of society, enter the post-house to minister to suffering mortals, and give themselves to unceasing toil and sleepless nights, to winbled, infatigable devotion of faith and folly, to the highest enjoyment of enduring bliss—are considered to retirement and obscurity, forego they labor in their private studies and apart from the walls of the busy multitude. The masses cringe and tremble to the conqueror of armies, and see glory in the gushing blood of his victims trickling from his skirts; while the student, the self-sacrificing student of the mysteries of Nature and Deity, shortens his own days by intense pursuit, to enlighten a world reveling in error and gross darkness, is left to poverty and want, although he indefatigably exercises a nobler, nay, ten thousand times a more noble calling than the soldier or the demagogue.

The Patriot, in the common acceptance of the term, is born in or from the recollection of the strife of war and the struggles of a political revolution; and the Soldier is the product of unimagined controversy; while the Christian Philanthropist is created by the Spirit of Grace, from on high, descending, directly into the inner recesses of the soul, and transforming that soul into the image of the Divine Master, by implanting the spirit of righteousness in his heart, as the sole motive to all his future actions. How or by what process that is effected, is not my purpose, now, to inquire. Whether it is a peculiar adaptation of the mental organization to be influenced, under certain conditions, by the word of truth, and thus conform its powers to the expressed will of God, the Lawgiver in Zion; or whether it be an effluvia—a mystic application of the Spirit of Grace, expelling the "old man," and implanting the "new man," by conferring new impulses, and new affinities, in the soul of fallen man; or whether it be the singular and faithful "renewal" of the Marstonburg Doctors—the absolute incorporation of an atom of the glorified body of the Lord Jesus in the heart of every penitent, and that infused body become the germ of the resurrection body—I leave for hair-splitting metaphysicians to argue and determine; it must suffice, at present, to say, in the words of the blessed Master: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but thou canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Were we disposed to inquire into this matter particularly, it would be quite as easy to imagine the rays of the Sun of Righteousness impinging, indelibly, his image on the heart of man, as the rays of light impinge permanent resemblances, absolute prickings of any object, on a polished plate covered with a single chemical preparation; which is the process of the Daguerreotype art. The heart of the natural man is hard, obdurate, resisting, devilish; but that heart of stone, that petrified soul, when rendered plastic by the word of God and penitential tears, may take the impress of the Spirit of Grace, as readily as the reticulate surface receives the etching of the chemical rays; and in the doings of Gethsemane and Calvary, thus left on the heart of the sincere inquirer, the crucified Redeemer recognizes his own lineaments, and adopts the penitent into his redeemed family. The Patriot's aspiration are, generally, confined to his own contracted Union; a Christian belongs to no country, and to nations, exclusively. His belongings are for the whole brotherhood of man—his country, the only country that claims his undivided fealty, is the spirit land, and his only Sovereign, the King of kings. The so-called Patriot acts, mostly, from selfish, oftentimes the most sordid motives; while the Christian is impelled by the ingenuous spirit of universal benevolence, to serve his day and his generation, and glorify his Master in the heavenly Canaan. The inflated demagogue, affecting the true patriot, not infrequently, inveighs, vehemently and disingenuously, against the Ministers of this holy calling; denouncing them, in vulgar rant, as the priest-hood—the "holy priesthood"—and as seeming them scarcely any more worthy than the Spirit of Darkness, himself, if not the visible embodiment of his Satanic Majesty. The last office the writer could be induced to undertake, would be to defend any Minister, or Priest, who should so far forget his holy calling, as to enter the political arena, and become the brawling gladiator, for any secular purpose, or use his office to circumvent the ignorant and the unsuspecting, or to introduce political questions into the pulpit, to fan discord and influence the elective franchise; and much less would be countenance any effort to commingle affairs of State and Church together; on the contrary, he would be among the first in the land, to join a crusade of uncompromising hostility to such an unallowable design, and would be willing to award a decree of condemnation no less than Anathema Maranatha. But all boasting patriots are not impelled by the purest motives; neither do I regard, by any means, that all the ministers of the blessed Gospel sustain the unblemished, unspotted character, becoming their high, their solemn vocation; but as the tree is to be judged by its fruit, let us draw a lesson from the theoretical Patriot, and contrast it with the ennobling traits of an humble servant of the Cross, as illustrated in a deeply interesting passage of the history of our beloved country, in one of its darkest days—one of its most trying times.

It is an easy matter to be a friend, and a very bold friend, in a good cause, while that cause is popular and it prospers; but it takes a stout heart, and a very stout heart, to embrace a cause under unpropitious circumstances and sore persecutions, and that particularly when its interests and its prospects of success are on the wane, and it is likely to overwhelm its advocates with infamy and obloquy.

The contrary course has ever been the tendency and practice of mankind, generally; say, thousands have ever been found ready to turn their heel against the most holy cause they may have espoused, when dark hours lower and portentous reverses beset them. Every period of the world's history, in every nation on earth, affords numerous and pertinent illustrations of this position; but it was a distinguished characteristic, in the noble struggle of our forefathers for Independence, that few, very few, comparatively, such renegades were found among the sires of the Revolution. Next to Benedict Arnold, we may, perhaps, rank Michael Widmer; not for any corresponding traits of talent or character, but for his perfidy and pusillanimity.

For a short time after the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed, on the memorable Fourth of July, 1776, and the tocsin of Freedom, first pealed from the old State House bell, was echoed and re-echoed throughout the length and breadth of the infant colonies, the whole land became vocal with shouts of Freedom, and the soul-inspiring songs of Liberty and Independence. Then it was easy to be a patriot, when every one was singing hymns to the American cause.

In covering our allegiance from the mother country, where so many interests lay, and around which so many near and dear ties clustered, it could not be expected, that it be otherwise than almost inevitable, that some, say, that many, should adhere to the old government, and to the royal cause. Such was to be expected; but when the masses responded to the manifesto of that august Congress, it became a popular passion to espouse the cause of Freedom. It was an easy thing, then, I repeat, to be a patriot. There was a poetry and an enthusiasm which carried along the buoyant throng; but when reverses came, when defeat followed defeat, and when impending dangers threatened to annihilate every vestige of successful opposition to Britain—when the brave army was flying before the invaders, when the civil powers were driven from their seats, and grim war and incessant sufferings overtook the noble martyrs in so holy a cause—there, and then, was "the time that tried men's souls."

The great wonder is, that, under such disasters, not more proved treacherous to the cause, and by a greater disaffection, ruin the almost expired hope of the American people. All praise to the spirit of the noble martyrs of the Revolution, and that valiant band of patriots who bared their breasts to the storm, and who became braver and stronger as dangers thickened, and, likewise, became the more devoted as their cause flagged. All praise, now and forever, to the noble sires of the war of Independence.

Soon as the news was spread abroad of the colonies having thrown off their allegiance to their Sovereign, the King of Great Britain, the people of almost every county or district organized themselves into Committees of Safety; who undertook to secure the cause of Freedom, and aid in supplying the means to carry on the conflict for Independence. Distinguished among those organizations, was the Committee of Safety, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania; at whose head was Michael Widmer, a prominent, enterprising citizen, who had been exceedingly zealous in the cause of his country.

Widmer kept a public house at the crossings of the Lancaster and Reading road, with the Brandywine and Paxton road, a short distance from Ephrata, the German Seventh-day Baptist settlement. There was no man more active, nor of bolder pretensions, than the same Michael Widmer, while the war of Freedom was in the ascendant; but he proved to be only a fair-weather man—a time-serving, truckling demagogue—one moved by the lowest impulses of the human heart, the basest avarice and the basest treachery.

One evening, soon after General Howe had taken possession of the city of Philadelphia, two men, who had come inco, to reconnoitre the Ephrata establishment, to which place the wounded American soldiers were sent by General Washington, after the battle of Brandywine, rode up to Widmer's tavern, and asked for lodgings. While they were seated at their supper, soon provided, they addressed Widmer pleasantly, who, standing with his back to an open window, and after some common-place remarks, Widmer blusteringly inquired, "Whether they knew how that General Howe was getting along in Philadelphia?"

Finished, instantly, by the ludicrous remark, one of the men asked, with some warmth, "What, sir, would you think if you were to see General Howe before you?"

"Think I?" replied, as hastily, "I think I should see as a second-rate as ever walked."

In an instant the stranger sprang on his feet, and presenting a pistol to Widmer's breast, exclaimed, "You—rebel, you are a dead man."

With a great agility, Widmer threw himself out of the window, backwards, and thus saved himself. As the night was dark, he eluded pursuit; and the strangers, fearing a disturbance in the neighborhood from the occurrence, left immediately, and were never seen again in the parts.

Although a tavern-keeper, Widmer was the most prominent man in that part of the county at the time, and always exercised an influence, for weal or for woe, as he best fit his inclination. He lived about midway between Ephrata and the old German Reformed Church of that vicinity; to which church Peter Miller ministered before he embraced the principles of the Seventh-day Baptists, and became a brother in the Monastic Establishment; ever which he was soon called to preside, as Prior. Widmer was one of the "Ketters" in the German Reformed Church, at the time Miller changed his views of divine truth, and attached himself to the Baptists, and he persecuted him unrelentingly, and to the most shameful extent; even made it his habit to spit in the venerable old man's face, every time and every where he met him, and otherwise abused and maltreated him scandalously.

After Widmer's escape through the window, he first directed his course to the cornfield, then to the rocky margin of the Kockhalskling; but not feeling safe or secure any where, and regarding his days as numbered if detected, he, in his extremity, sought the place where no one would ever suspect him of being concealed, and retreated himself in the Brother's House in Ephrata, of whom he had been such a shameless reviler and persecutor—not only of the Prior, but many of the other brethren. Entering his long narrow passage, which were never barred at night, he made his way quietly to the attic, or rather the upper, unoccupied loft, in the peak of its high roof, and there lay, behind a stack of chimneys, three days and three nights, without food or drink.

Resting on his position, his sad predicament, and fearing the worst, he resolved to go to Philadelphia, and endeavor to confound General Howe; and finding his way out, again, about midnight on the fourth night, he communicated his purpose to his wife, supplied himself with money and such clothing as he deemed needful, and set out at once for the city.

On his arrival in Philadelphia, he hastened to General Howe's Quarters, and asked admission, on the plea of having important matters to communicate to the commanding officer.

When Widmer was ushered into the presence of General Howe, he became very much embarrassed, and could not give utterance to a single word. To break that unmeaning pause, the General inquired, "With whom are you in communication?" Widmer hesitated, and then said, that "when assured that forgiveness would be granted to one who had embraced the American cause from the onset, and had, in his zeal, been disconcerted to the royal cause and its adherents, he would add important information of stores and ammunition concealed for the rebels."

While making this declaration, two officers were thumbing a book of entry or record before them, and before General Howe opened his lips in reply, the officers directed his attention to the page before them. After reading a short paragraph, during which he glanced his eye several times at Widmer, he suddenly exclaimed, "Ah! sir, you are Michael Widmer."

It was like a thunderbolt to him. He fell on his knees, and besought his mercy; and not only begged like a poor culprit, but proffered his services to perform any duty against the Americans.

General Howe's only reply was, "that it was the policy of the British officers to encourage disaffection in the rebel ranks; yet, one who had occupied such a position in the confidence of his countrymen, as he, Widmer, had, and could prove treacherous to them on so slight a pretext—such a cowardly, contemptible pretext, could never be trusted in the Royal cause," and gave him permission to depart, with orders that he be seen safely beyond the English outposts.

Widmer did not leave his home two days before his wife proclaimed his purpose of dark treachery. Dispatches were sent to all the American nations connected with the immediate disaffection, apprising the officers in command, and the Committees of Safety of the lower counties, of Widmer's design, and all were on the alert to secure him.

On approaching the first outpost of the American lines, he was discovered and arrested. He was carried to the nearest Block House, at the Turk's Head, now West-Case, where he was carefully kept in chains until a Court Martial was summoned on his case.

The action of the Court was prompt and summary, and he was adjudged to be hung—the penalty for traitors in that day.

Among all who expressed an opinion on his base treachery, among his neighbors, who denounced him without stint, there was but one person who withheld condemnation and denunciation—but one soul that cherished a kindly thought for him; and that was Peter Miller—the much-abused Peter Miller.

Peter Miller, on hearing of his arrest, set out immediately, to the Camp at the Valley Forge; at which place he arrived, just as General Washington had approved and dispatched, by a courier, the finding of the Court Martial. Miller, being intimately acquainted with General Lee, who had visited him frequently, at Ephrata, as a scholar, was presented to the Commander-in-Chief immediately. Washington received him graciously, for he had heard much of him favorably, as connected with the Ephrata Monastic Establishment, during the war of 1756—the French war, as it was denominated—and had the highest testimonials of him in advance of this interview, from all the Officers and Surgeons in attendance on the wounded at the Cloister.

Washington requested him to be seated; but Miller replied, that his business with him would not admit of a moment's delay—that it required immediate dispatch; and instantly proceeded to plead for mercy towards Widmer, most forcibly, most eloquently.

It was a majestic tableau to look upon the American Commander-in-Chief, General Lee, and several other staff-officers, and Peter Miller, in his monastic wardrobe standing in front, forming a most imposing group. Peter Miller was a tall man, of much grace, clad in a long grey tunic or robe, secured by a simple belt around his waist, while the coal-thrown back exposed his exuberant sooty hair and strong white beard, flowing in graceful waves over his shoulders, and covering his whole chest in front, while his expressive face, strongly marked with intelligence and benignity, was animated by the warmest benevolence, as he stood for the life of a fellow being. All were absorbed in listening to the burning words falling from the Prior's lips, which subdued the military idea of retaliation almost entirely, in every breast, and all began to regard the Commander-in-Chief as disposed to exercise his prerogative of mercy; but, rallying himself to the responsibility of his station, he replied: "Friend Miller, there is scarcely any thing in this world, that I would deny to you, but such is the state of public affairs, that it would be fatal to our cause, not to be stringent, inexorable, in such matters, and make examples of renegades to the cause of Liberty; otherwise I should most cheerfully release your friend."

"Peter Miller was regarded as one of the best lawyers in the country, and at the instance of Charles Thompson, Esq., Secretary of the Continental Congress, translated the Declaration of Independence into seven languages, for the European Court."

"Friend!" exclaimed Miller, interrupting General Washington, and at the same time throwing up both his hands, as if in attestation to the Searcher of Hearts—"be it my worst enemy—my incessant reviler. For a friend I might not importance you; but Widmer being, and having been, for years, my worst, my malignant, persecuting enemy, my religion teaches me 'to pray for those who despitefully use me.'"

The tears coursed down the brave old Commander's cheeks, and taking Miller by the hand, he replied: "My dear friend, I thank you for this lesson of Christian charity. I cannot resist such a manifestation of our divine religion; the pardon shall be granted on one condition, and that is, you be the bearer of it yourself, and hand it to the Commanding Officer at Turk's Head, in Widmer's presence."

Miller assented to the condition. The pardon was prepared with the least possible delay, and handed to the Prior, who sat out immediately, and reached the Turk's Head on foot, late that night, a distance of eighteen or twenty miles.

Rising early next morning, after a sleepless night, he found the front of the Block House surrounded by a few soldiers drawn up in a hollow square, having a gibbet in the center, and Widmer standing on the step, with a rope adjusted around his neck, addressing those present. He acknowledged his treachery, and acquiesced in the award; warned them to faithfulness and steadfastness to the cause of Liberty; and just as he was benedicting mercy from above, Miller stepped forward and handed to the Commanding Officer a package, stating in an undertone, that it was from the Commander-in-Chief, in reference to the matter before them. While the Commander of the post was perusing the document, Widmer copied Peter Miller. He blushed, and became greatly agitated, not knowing any thing of the design of the Prior's visit, and could only assign his presence to the gratification it would afford him to see so vile and abhorrent a persecutor receive his just deserts. There stood the inflated demagogue, the theoretical patriot, the craven coward, overwhelmed with shame, awaiting an ignominious death; and there stood the humble disciple of the Cross, on an errand of mercy to his enemy, not wanting himself, but supported by the soul-sustaining principles of his holy calling.

The contrast to Widmer was galling in the extreme, but, summoning up courage, he addressed Miller from where he stood: "Peter Miller, whatever has prompted your presence at this place, at this time, I avail myself of the occasion to acknowledge my great and multiplied shame and persecution, with which I have followed you for years past; and esteem it the kindest providence, that I have the opportunity to retract my numerous vilifications and outrages upon you, and crave your forgiveness. My unmitigated persecution of you was beyond measure, and although I have no right to look for forgiveness for such wanton maltreatment, yet I trust that I may find pardon above."

The Commanding Officer interrupted Widmer at this point, by assenting to him, that the Commander-in-Chief had granted a pardon for his crime; and presenting Peter Miller, said, "Here is your deliverer."

The bold, blustering demagogue was dumfounded—he could not utter a word, but cast himself, prostrate, on the ground at Miller's feet. It wanted no words—all witnessed, all felt, all acknowledged, this extraordinary manifestation of the nobility of Christianity. It could not be uttered. It was not an earthly but a celestial emotion, and earth's vocabulary possesses no language to define or portray it. The nobility of Christianity is only seen in transient glimpses on earth; its perfect fruition, to which we may approximate in some measure on earth, can only be fully comprehended and appreciated in heaven.

BRIDGEPORT, N. J., Nov. 13, 1853.

CARRY YOUR LETTERS.

My heart has been pained, (says a minister in Wisconsin,) to find so many backsliding professors of religion, who had laid down all forms of religion; and I would here recommend to all coming West to take letters and bring them along with them, and present them at the first opportunity. But, even if they do not then present them, they may serve as faithful monitors, as was true in one case among us. In a meeting, one night, of deep solemnity, a man rose and said, "It is a wonder to me that I am out of hell!" and then went on to relate, that nine years before he had taken a letter from a church East, and brought it into this country, and instead of presenting it to the church, he laid it away at the bottom of his chest. He said that every time he had seen it there it had troubled him so much that once he had resolved to burn it; but his silent reproach prevented his committing that outrage upon his faithful monitor. He then confessed he also humbly before the people, kneel down in the midst of the congregation, and in an humble prayer of penitence confessed his sins before God, and asked his forgiveness. I thought, Oh that our pastors and churches at the East would see to it that all their members that go out from them take letters along with them! This man's wife is among the converts, and joined the church with him, and presented their only child to God in baptism, and so they have vowed to train it for God.

Let every pastor who reads this ask himself whether any of his own people have emigrated to the new States, and are living without church connections there; and whether he has not a duty to discharge in the premises. (One Journal.)

THE COPENHAGEN WATCHMEN.

The following is a translated and characteristic translation, by Mr. Ellis, of the ancient song of the Copenhagen watchmen, which still keeps its place as a part of the manners and customs of that town. Its author was Thomas King, Bishop of Tyne, in the seventeenth century, was of a poor Danish weaver. Thomas King, was informed, was the best of Danish poets, and a country-bred of his composition still remains authentic and in use at Copenhagen in Norway.

When Day departs, and Darkness reigns on earth,
The watchmen stand on the gloomy grave!
Then let Thy light, O Lord, before us shine,
While to the silent tomb our steps we bend,
And grant a blessed intercalary!

The Day glides by, and while Night appears—
For Jesus' sake, O God, our song begins—
Preserve the Royal Family,
And guard the people which this land contains
From danger of the Enemy!

Master, maid, and boy, would you the hour know?
It is the time that you to rest should go—
Trust in the Lord with faith—and surely he
Of life and light, and our souls shall save!

Almighty God protects both great and small;
His holy angels guard us like a wall.
The Lord himself our city watches over,
And keeps our bodies and our souls from harm.

At the hour of midnight we our services begin—
Great blessing to a world, which has been lost!
Then, with uplifted lips, in prayer and praise,
Commend yourselves to God. Past Twelve o'clock.

O Jesus Christ, we pray Thy aid to help
To bear our Cross with patience in the world,
For thou art God alone!
And Thou, O Comforter, Thine hand stretch forth,
Then with the Jordan light and may be!

O precious Lord, whose love for us was such
That thou shouldst die to save us from the curse,
All glory is due to Thee!
Come, Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts
Thy heavenly light, that we may see Thee now
And in Eternity!

Black Night departs, and Day begins to dawn—
Keep them far off, O God, who wish us harm!
The clock has struck twelve, the hour is past,
Fellow, Thine aid we seek—blessed Thy Grace
Give us abundantly!

Of us who dwell below—
To Thee, surrounded by the Heavenly Host,
Honor and praise are due!
For this good night give thanks unto the Lord!
Remember! Fast!—we're summoned from our earth.

When Morning Star we now behold
To Thy presence, cheerfully, our King!
Be Thou his Son and Father!
And thou, bright Orb of Day, begin thy course,
And, rising from the Mercy-seat of God,
Thy radiant lustre yield!

WATCH FOR SOULS.

When asked as pastor for the Baptist church in Lowell, Ohio, one Saturday, as I returned home from church meeting a man, of whom I had a little knowledge, and but little stood at the gate of my next neighbor. I observed he regarded me with interest, as though wishing to speak to me. I stopped accordingly, and engaged in conversation with him. It was on general topics, although I thought at the time he probably wished to converse on the subject of religion. A feeling of delicacy and difficulty hindered; perhaps I should say, "but Satan hindered;" for, the truth was, in addition to never being very skillful in the pastoral office, I was then afraid of my running me into precariously difficulties, having never received any aid from the church I served. I was led to see, the more converts or Christian friends, the more waste of time, if I served faithfully. But so it was; the occasion passed, as also did the Sabbath; and although he attended preaching, the gray-headed, pleasant countenance man returned home, and no talk about religion.

Not long after, I was called to attend his funeral; he had died suddenly—his own family not looking for it. I found his humble dwelling standing remote from the thoroughfares of men, and along with abundant marks of industry and taste, were seen the evidences of poverty and trouble that had brought him to that location. And within doors, the heart-rending grief of one or two little girls, as they patted the cold cheeks of their dead father, and tried to embrace him in his coffin, and the silent anguish of his wife, told plainly enough how high he had stood in their affections, and how great their present loss.

After a month or two, the widow came out again, and I happened in her company. The conversation turned on her recent loss. She told me of her husband's troubles, and how he said to her, shortly before his death, that he expected to live but a short time. "And O!" continued she, "how the poor soul wanted to be baptized. Do you remember, sir, when he came down to your meeting last, and met you at Mr. —'s gate?" "Yes," "Well, he came down on purpose, and stood there at the gate to talk with you about it, when you came along. But he couldn't get the matter introduced, somehow, and it was not done. But it would have been such a consolation to him, and to the rest of us, now he is gone. I always shall be sorry you didn't know what he wanted."

This felt like a million on my feelings. I thought of the apostolic injunction: "Watch for souls, as they that must give account." I promised myself to reform, but fear I have never done it.

A USER'S SKETCH.—The Proslavery says that the discourse by Rev. George Foss, D. D., of New York, preached in behalf of the American Sunday-School Union, seems destined to a large circulation. The Union have published 25,000 copies of it. The necessity of developing and employing the latent talent of Church members is the subject of it, and a more important one to the efficiency of the Church could scarcely have been selected.

It is said that all the weeping willow trees in England originated from a twig planted by Pope. He received a present of a tree from Turkey, and observing a twig in the basket, he set it in his garden, where it became a fine tree.

Sabbath Recorder.

Nov. 24, 1853.

Proclamation.
 By the Hon. the Secy. of the State of N. Y.
 I hereby proclaim, that on THURSDAY, the twenty-fourth day of November, 1853, the people of the State of New York, are to observe a day of public prayer and thanksgiving, for the preservation of the Union, and the prosperity of the State, and the welfare of the people. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, R. W. JOHNSON, Secy. of the State.

MIXED MARRIAGES AND FAMILY GOVERNMENT—AGAIN.

The keeping of two days instead of one is not the only difficulty which springs from the intermarriage of Sabbatarians with Sunday-keepers. The rearing of children develops trials, in connection with which the burden of keeping two days is nothing. One of the first duties which a pious mother urges upon her offspring is to keep holy the Sabbath day. She feels that she can scarcely begin too early. She watches the dawdling of intellect with fond anxiety, and every hour tries some new expedient to prove the child's capability of discerning between good and evil. She finds that her own sense is very early made sensible of the difference between one day and another; and by training him to lay aside his play and toys on the Sabbath, and solemnly telling him that it is God's holy day, she leads him into the knowledge of that Being, whose work of wisdom and power the Sabbath commemorates. Thus, while the child is yet so young, he can scarcely slip the words of the commandment, he becomes by means of the Sabbath instructed in the first elements of piety.

Can the conscientious, God-fearing mother, omit to place this duty upon her dear child? Must she bound up, and restrained from saying anything on the subject? Must she refrain from saying a duty which, in connection with the honoring parents, is the point at which religious instruction properly begins? For, be it remembered, that the Fourth and Fifth Commandments are almost the only ones which every child can be made readily to comprehend. It would be somewhat difficult to teach a child two years old the sin of graven images, or of profaning the Sabbath. But it is easy to say to him, "This is the day of the Lord; you must not play upon this day; you must lay aside all your toys, and quietness till the sun is down," as to make him understand, that it is different from all other days of the week, and having made him understand this, he has made a fair beginning. Giving him, then, the God who claims him as his own, his Creator, whom he ought to love and obey. It might be somewhat to make a child so young understand the sin of adultery, or of theft, or of covetousness; for the relations affected by such things are not yet clear to him. But the which his parents stand towards him before any other; it is the first becomes sensible. Hence it is the design of Infinite Wisdom, that the religious instruction should commence with the Commandments, and that from this natural starting point, the infant mind should be led along into the clear knowledge of every duty of the Divine Law. Parents do not begin the religious instruction of their children in this way, go to work upon the first, and foremost, and the consequence is, that the child, when he grows up, becomes "abominable, and disobedient, and every good word reprobateth."

But what is to be done? Must the Seventh-day Baptist mother seal her lips on this most important subject? Must she withhold from her child, when God requires to be trained in the way of his commandments, almost the only religious instruction which his infant mind can receive? May she omit that very first of instruction, which would give a decided impression to her child's moral character, and perhaps shape his destiny for eternity? No, she has bound herself by her own oath. She has come under subjection to a husband who will not allow his children to be taught that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. He believes that the first day of the week is holy time, and thanks the Lord every Sunday morning, for the return of another day of rest. Whatever is taught to children, must be in accordance with this; and if the wife cannot conscientiously teach thus, she must hold her tongue, and have a conscience, as well as she; and thus it may be a perverted one, it is nevertheless in her conscience, and its promptings he can disregard, without feeling that he risks his own salvation. He obeys his conscience, and has his children taught that Sunday is the Lord's day. It is folly for the wife to set up her conscience in opposition to her husband's. She should have thought of that before; it is now too late. She must withhold her instructions; she has no alternative.

Well, the family increases; the children are multiplied; sons and daughters make up the group. The work of each week goes on, and the Sunday of the mother bursts, that, by the going down of the sun, she may be free from care. But the father acts differently, and the seventh-day drives his employment away. The children remark the strange difference, and wonder that father and mother cannot agree in their practice. The effect on them is disastrous. The mother's silent example proves insufficient to counteract an influence which is backed by the father's authority and all the world beside. It is easy for the children to follow that example which has the sanction of popular favor; and so, as they grow up, they go as the father goes. They go to church with the father, not with the mother. She, poor thing, goes alone, sits alone, returns alone, and returns to find her house a scene of turmoil and hurry. The children go to church with their father, not because they honestly believe that he is right, but because it is more agreeable to do so. The throng is there; the popular preacher is there; the large choir is there; their young companions are there; the excitement which the young mind loves are there. They join the assembly in singing and say Amen, as their father does, when the minister says, "We thank thee, O Lord, for another of the days of the Son of Man!" The mother witnesses it all, moans that the truth is set at naught in her own family, but hopes, (O how anxiously does a mother hope for her children's welfare!) that as they are not willing to keep the true Sabbath, they will, nevertheless, become good Christians of the first-day order.

"This is the day the Lord hath made,"
 "He calls the hours his own."

It is well if the result is no worse. It would be well if the children were to become as pious even as the father. But, in the majority of cases, they learn to despise religion. How could it well be otherwise? If the Sabbath, that institution by which the infant mind is first impressed with the sacredness of divine things, is not to be employed for any such purpose, except so far as the father may choose—if the mother is to be restrained from making any use of it as a means of leading her children to God—if during all the time that they are under her molding hand, and gentle but powerful sway, it is never once to be named to them; what wonder is it if, in the mean time, their corrupt nature should gain such an advantage, that all other religious culture should prove as water split upon the ground? As they grow up, they keep no day of rest. They do not keep the Bible Sabbath, because they have never been allowed to do so. They do not keep the Sunday, because they have become old enough to discover the cheat by which it was attempted to impose it upon them as a divine institution. They now act for themselves, and they have no Sabbath at all. Sometimes they are found paying a sort of outward respect to the seventh day of the week, and sometimes to the first; sitting from one to the other, back and forth, as considerations of profit or popularity dictate.

It may be counted a hard thing that the mother, who travels in pains most agonizing to bring her children into the world—who gives them nourishment from her own body—who nurses them by night and by day—who toils for them, cares for them in sickness, weeps when they are in trouble, and sighs when they are glad—who will take the food from her own mouth that they may be fed, and the ransom from her own back that they may be clothed—should, nevertheless, be prohibited from inculcating her own religious faith upon their minds. We admit it; it is hard. But if mother and father cannot agree in this business, one or the other must yield. There can be no government, where there is not some authority that is supreme. If God has given this authority to the father, there let it remain; and let our Seventh-day Baptists sisters look sharply, and pray earnestly, before they place themselves in such a situation.

THE MAINE LAW.

The State of New York is now to have the Maine Law. The election of a fair majority, of both branches of the Legislature on this issue, shows that public sentiment has already decided in its favor. This result has been secured by long-continued, well directed, effort. A still greater effort is to be made, to execute such a law, when it shall be the law of the land. Heretofore the effort has been one of argument—of persuasion. Henceforth it is to combine legal action, and physical force, with moral suasion, and for the simple reason, that personal interests, and incurable ignorance, can not be convinced by argument. Rumblers have been deaf to the cry of wretchedness caused by their traffic. The poverty of a drunkard's home—the wretchedness of his family—the misery, starvation, and disgrace, entailed upon his victims—have failed to unseat the feelings of his heart. Cold, relentless, unmoved, he has gathered up the price of suffering, disgrace, orphanage, and widowhood, and laid it in his coffers.

The people have decided that the day of oppression, of wretchedness, and ruin, caused by intemperance, shall now pass away. The great destroyer of peace, of social happiness—the blighter of hopes, and ruin of souls—is himself to be destroyed. But how changed will be the scene! The passage of the Maine Law will inspire the first beatings of hope and happiness in hearts that have been crushed in hopeless despair. The joy flashing from countenances heretofore cast down will brighten many a home of wretchedness. The rags of poverty will be cast away, when wives and children are allowed the use of their own hard earnings. And then shall thousands of the enslaved assert and maintain their freedom, when the temper is chained. Amid all the joy, and hope, and freedom, that will dance on many a countenance in the new Millennium of the Maine Law, there will appear the very pitiful, ludicrous, woe-begone face of the rumbler, taking sympathy. Ah! he who has never given signs of possessing a human heart, and commiserating human suffering, will appear as tender and meek as a lamb. He who has never heeded the prayer of poverty and wretchedness, will offer the most melting prayer, when a righteous law shall compel him to stop his business of destruction. Because of this prayer, and the cry "it will ruin me," "it is unjust to stop my business and destroy my property," thousands will become faint-hearted and irresolute. And now, when the shout of victory cleaves the air, and rejoices, as it is taken up and repeated by thousands who hail it as their only hope, there will be found a multitude of impracticables, who will be afraid of the consequences of enforcing the law. The drunkard has in it the hope of redemption, and will gladly hail it. The tax-payer will find in it a diminution of his taxes. By it jails will become tenanted, crime will diminish, and litigation grow less. None can suffer by it, except those who have made a trade of making others suffer. Let none be faint-hearted. The strife to enforce the law may be a severe one; but on the part of the law it is a strife for right, for humanity, for truth. And shall a man's courage fail him when he is advocating the cause of the oppressed and afflicted? Never before has so glorious a triumph, with such promises of complete and permanent success, been secured. Every philanthropist must hail it with sincere delight, and labor on till he sees in its enforcement the consummation of all for which he has labored, and prayed, and hoped.

There is one spot among us as a people where licensed liquor-selling has never been known. Happy spot that, where the destroyer has not invaded the domestic circles, and claimed as its victims, its hope and pride. The enforcement of a prohibitory law may yet change other societies and homes, and make them as happy as those that have never been desolated. Now is the time for each man, woman and child to petition for the enactment of the Maine Law. When it is passed, let each man feel that he is bound, by all the sacred obligations of humanity and religion, to see it enforced.

PALESTINE MISSION.

Christianity dispenses physical as well as spiritual good to mankind.

Man in an unregenerate state realizes the existence and effects of sin first as it relates to his physical being and destiny. To dry up the source of human life, and to alleviate its sufferings, he naturally anticipates, will be the first feature in the development of a divine scheme of salvation. Nor is it possible for him easily to divert his attention from this view of the subject. He rationally supposes, that if the greater blessings of salvation are freely offered, and may be obtained with the certainty of a divine promise, that the lesser, or physical benefits, will be secured as a matter of course. These natural impressions seen to have been fully appreciated by the Son of God, in opening and establishing his mission of mercy on earth. Hence his life and labors were characterized with the lovely feature of blessing the bodies as well as souls of men. He often appealed to those humane and benevolent acts and offices, which he performed in such rich abundance, and to which his life was chiefly devoted, as furnishing the most conclusive evidence which the unregenerate and unenlightened mind is capable of appreciating, that he "came down from heaven," and that he was "working the works of God." Man's moral condition is now as hopeless, his power of perception as faint, and his will as strongly developed in opposition to religion, as when Jesus Christ lived and labored on earth. Hence the same mode of approaching and penetrating his darkness, removing his prejudices, and winning his heart to the gospel, which was adopted by its Divine Author, should be relied upon by his church. If in introducing his message of love, and to prove his own divinity, the Saviour of men called attention to the fact, that under his benevolent labors, "the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them," the fact that the church in the same spirit is devoting her energies to the same blessed object, must furnish to the world the most unmistakable testimony that she is fulfilling a divine commission. In proportion as she has developed this feature of benevolence, in that ratio has she invited and arrested the wandering spirit of unregenerate man, which in its restless roving after the means of satisfying its immortal longings, too often hews to itself "broken cisterns, which can hold no water."

When, by the guiding hand of Christian kindness, the hand of sympathy is put forth to wipe the tear of anguish, and to administer to hunger, thirst, and destitution, then it is that the icy regions of the soul are warmed into gratitude, and an avenue is opened to the heart, by which may be introduced the bread and water of eternal life. By opening the ears of the deaf, and the eyes of the blind, the Saviour found a communication to the heart, through which the saving benefits of his salvation were dispensed.

Nor did he fail to impress the importance of this primary branch of Christian effort upon the consideration of his disciples. His allusion to the deed of benevolence and mercy performed by the "good Samaritan," is of such a nature as to make every Christian feel that it is not only deeply interesting as an incident in the history of true benevolence, but that it is designed as a model by which he is to be guided in his efforts to bless the world. It commends the humanity of this member of a proscribed and despised sect, as possessing an essential element of "pure religion and undefiled." Our Lord presents this subject in its most impressive aspect, and exhibits its thrilling importance, by carrying our minds forward to the scenes of the final judgment, when deeds of humanity done "to the least of these his brethren," although long forgotten by the doer, are called to remembrance by the Judge, and accounted as done to himself, while those who had not found a duty and pleasure in ministering to the hungry, the thirsty, the stranger, the naked, the sick and imprisoned, had failed to imbibes the first principles of Christianity, and should be sentenced as guilty of neglecting the Son of God in the persons of his poor and suffering brethren.

This is the work which we propose to enter upon in behalf of the dispersed and despoiled of the Holy Land. On a soil rich and productive, in a climate both balmy and healthful, amidst associations the most sacred and inspiring, we find in circumstances of abject ignorance, poverty and oppression, the devoted representative of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The description given by Hannan and his brethren, to the pious and patriotic Nehemiah, is literally true of the present Jewish inhabitants of the land of Zion. "They are in great affliction and reproach." With the Jew we find also the Turk and Arab, alike needing the knowledge of the useful arts, and perishing for the want of salvation.

We are told by those who have labored on that field, and whose hearts and hands are devoted to the work of blessing the afflicted sons of Zion, that our religious faith and practice give us an influence, with the Jew especially, which no other body of Christians can command. As lovers of Jehovah's holy day, they look with suspicion upon every effort put forth in their behalf by those who disregard its divine claims. It is only of late that they have learned, through the self-denying efforts of a few American Sabbath-keeping Christians, that the long-neglected soil of their own beloved land will produce in abundance the most nutritious products of our own hand. Towards Sabbath-keepers they are beginning to look with imploring interest. Through them they have seen an exhibition of that very interesting element of Christianity which forbids the church to treat with pious mockery "a brother or sister who is naked and destitute of daily food," by saying unto him "depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body." This truly philosophical as well as Christian plan of providing food and clothing for the heathy and destitute, and industrial employments for the poor Jews and Arabs, has already done much to remove their long-settled prejudices against Christianity, and to create their increasing desire to become acquainted with a religion which they are convinced, from its practical operation, must be far superior to their own. I rejoice that God has directed the eyes and sympathies of the denomination, and the attention of our Missionary Board, to this most interesting field.

The genius of Christianity—the favorable laws by which Palestine is governed, so far as they relate to religious toleration—the wants and claims of that deeply-afflicted portion of our fellow-men—and every indication in God's providence, invites us to enter and occupy it. Let us not forget that it is our duty to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," that prosperity may again visit her ancient palaces, remembering that "they shall prosper that love her." While, therefore, we give of our money, and of such other useful articles as may be needed for the outfit of those whom we have chosen to labor in that land, let us continually offer our devout intercessions, that they through whose unbelief and rejection of the Messiah we have obtained mercy, may also obtain mercy through our mercy. A. B. R. WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 18, 1853.

SABBATH LECTURES—NO. 2.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:

In a former article, I offered a few thoughts on Sabbath Lectures, showing that the objections which are made against them lie equally against the preaching of the gospel, and any other object of reform. I therefore deem such lectures perfectly consistent with a courteous and Christian manner of presenting truth, and aim at the champions of truth, the defenders of God's law, the sobriquet of bulldog fighter, disputer, &c. For, be it known, that Jesus and Paul disputed every inch of ground they gained. And let all know, that the Captain of our salvation has declared, that it is only the violent that can storm his castle and enter the kingdom of heaven.

Such being my views, I cheerfully cooperated with Bro. Crandall, as an Agent of the Am. Sabbath Tract Society. In order, therefore to aid him in his agency, I requested him to lecture on the subject of the Sabbath at Sacket's Harbor, in the Methodist meeting-house, which was procured for the purpose. On the appointed evening, a very respectable audience was convened. There was present, also, the Presbyterian clergyman, Rev. Mr. Sawyer, and the Methodist, Rev. Mr. Foote. Bro. Crandall aimed in that lecture to show the perpetuity of the law of God, and that the Sabbath, as a part of that law, was of perpetual obligation. In this position he showed he was sustained by Watson and Dwight, both theological writers of high repute, and observers of the first day. He also quoted largely from history, to show that the church for many centuries observed the true Sabbath of the Lord. At the close of the lecture, opportunity was given to any one to speak; but as no one accepted the invitation, the meeting was closed.

Just before retiring, I was introduced to the Rev. Mr. Sawyer, who requested the privilege of giving his views to our people in Housatonic on some Sabbath day, adding, that he thought he could convince them of their error. To his proposition I assented, and appointed the next Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, the usual time of service.

On the Sabbath a large congregation was convened, in which were a goodly number of ministers; whose names, as near as I can recollect, are as follows: Sawyer, Foote, Lyons, Berchard, of the first-day order; Crandall, Summerbell, J. Greene, W. Greene, Griswold. Eld. Campbell, who was expecting to have been present, was prevented by the disappointment of his substitute to preach for him. The services were opened by reading the 17th of John, prayer, and the singing of the good old Sabbatharian hymn, "Another six days work is done." Mr. Sawyer introduced his subject by appropriate remarks upon his text, which was John 16: 13—"Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth." From this text Mr. Sawyer inferred that the people of God would be guided into truth, although he admitted that they might err, even with this guide. The impression which he evidently designed to make was, that although no precept for first-day observance might be found, yet to such observance Christians might be directed by the Spirit. The speaker then proceeded to his argument, or proof, for the observance of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath. It should be premised, that he admitted the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath given to Adam, the world, and the Jewish nation—that the Sabbath was incorporated in the fourth commandment—that it was the day in use as the Sabbath in the days of Christ.

The speaker's first argument was based upon Ezekiel 43: 27—"And when those days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar." Mr. Sawyer maintained that by the eighth day was intimated the change from the seventh to the first day. He thought there was also some intimation of the same change in Psalm—"This is the day the Lord hath made"—although on the last text he would not lay much weight. But upon the former he seemed to have no doubt.

He proceeded to sustain the change from the resurrection, and from the frequent appearances of Christ on the first day, maintaining that Christ never made his appearance to his disciples except on the first day. Acts 20: 7, 1 Cor. 16: 1, Rev. 1: 10, were also brought forward to sustain his position. He then entered history, which he said fully corroborated his views, by showing that the early Christians all kept the first day, and that Constantine found its observance universal. The speaker thought that history had been interpolated, and otherwise altered, to suit the purpose of Sabbatarians and the Catholic Church, but that true history favored first-day observance, as well as teaching good Presbyterianism.

Having thus run through his argument in favor of a change from the seventh to the first, the speaker then expressed his most decided conviction, that Jesus Christ had given a precept for the keeping of the first day, but that such precept was not recorded. He then assumed, that the now first day of the week was the original seventh day, so that, in point of fact, he was keeping the true seventh day as the Sabbath. For proof of this assumption, he showed that at the exodus of Israel the Sabbath was put back one day, also, when Joshua led the sun stand still one day, that would carry the Sabbath forward one day, so that now the first day was the true seventh day.

It seemed strange to me, that the speaker could not see, that according to his own showing of the receding and advancing of the days of the week, he had only restored by Joshua's dual day, what had fallen back at the exodus of Israel; but he was so set on making out Sunday to be the Sabbath, that even his mathematical demonstration was fallacious.

Such was, in substance, the lecture as given by Rev. Mr. Sawyer. It is but just to say, that throughout, the discourse was characterized by clearness of diction, and the speaker or by the courtesy of a Christian minister; and although all were not convinced of the truth of his position, yet all were highly pleased by the good feeling which pervaded both the speaker and the congregation.

On First-day evening, a large assembly came together at the same place to hear a review of the discourse of Mr. Sawyer, by Eld. Crandall. After prayer and singing, Mr. Crandall commenced by passing some criticisms upon the introductory of Mr. Sawyer, particularly referring to a remark of Mr. Sawyer, that his object in discussion was not victory, but truth. Mr. Crandall thought such remarks uncalled for, as they seemed to intimate that some argued for victory, not truth, which he (Crandall) did not believe was the case generally. He then proceeded to examine Mr. Sawyer's argument, drawn from Ezekiel 43: 27. He showed that there was nothing in it having a bearing on the question under consideration, and the reason why he (Crandall) noticed it so long, was because there was nothing in it.

Mr. Crandall then re-examined the various texts mentioned by Mr. Sawyer in the New Testament, and showed that there was no account of Christ meeting with his disciples for worship on the first day of the week, after his resurrection, nor of the Apostles doing so.

He showed from Tyndal's translation of the New Testament, that Acts 20: 7, also 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2, referred to the seventh day instead of the first, and that Tyndal had rendered each of those passages Sabbath-day. As Mr. Sawyer had endeavored to detract from the authority of Tyndal's translation, by saying that Tyndal did not fully understand the true idiom of the Greek, which had led him to render Acts 20: 7 and 1 Cor. 16: 2 Sabbath instead of first day, but that more modern acquaintance with the Greek had decided those phrases to mean the first instead of the seventh day. Mr. Crandall most ably defended that ancient martyr and learned translator from the ignorance which Mr. S. charged him with, and showed pretty clearly that suspicion rested on translators who had followed Tyndal as having made a translation to conform to their Sunday observance.

Mr. Crandall also showed, that there had been, and were still, many mutilations of history upon this subject—that the American Tract Society had suppressed certain passages in Buckner's Researches in Asia, also in Dr. Noander's church history—that fraud had been practiced in order to suppress evidence in favor of the true Sabbath. He then read from Peter Haylin's History of the Sabbath, extracts from Ignatius and others, contrasting them with those given by Mr. Sawyer, which showed that those ancient Sabbath-keepers had been made to give testimony in favor of first-day keeping as the Sabbath, when the fact was that they gave positive evidence in favor of the seventh day.

Mr. Crandall completely demolished the ingenious but sophistical fabric which Mr. Sawyer erected the day before in favor of Sunday-keeping, and it vanished like the baseless fabric of a vision, leaving not a wreck behind. It was indeed a masterly discourse, and did honor even to Mr. Crandall himself. It was calm, dignified, unanswerable. Lectures such as the above, are not only arguments, but counterpoints of the kind delivered by Jesus and his Apostles. In the above I have only given the sketch from memory, not having taken any notes at the time.

S. S. GARWOOD.

NOTES OF A CORRESPONDENT.

From a Journey West, continued from Recorder of Oct. 26.

We are free to acknowledge our love and admiration of the West; it is a great and beautiful country. There is encouragement there for the poor man as well as for the rich. Labor is every where necessary to a living; but the same amount of toil expended upon the soil in the East, would, if laid out in the West, produce much more, and then, the poor can do as well, yea, under ordinary circumstances, better in that country than in this, at least, so it seems to us.

There is much of the best quality of land to be bought in and around our churches in Wisconsin. Milton, Albion, and Christiana, are upon the route leading from Milwaukee to Madison, the capital of the State, with the Milwaukee and Mississippi Railroad running directly or nearly through the centre of the towns. Said a brother to us, "Here is a Seventh-day Baptist street, at least twenty-two miles long, the farms adjacent being owned principally by our people." A score more of families settling here would make a emphatically a Sabbatarian community.

Big Foot Prairie, nine miles long by four or five broad, offers excellent advantages to new comers; not that land there is so very cheap, but that it can be purchased at moderate prices, and will not fall of rewarding the husbandman as well as any other section of the State. Brothers desirous of a home in the West should look well to the claims of these several localities, and perhaps we ought to add, (though we have not seen them,) those of Berlin and Dakota, situated, if our memory serves us right, about one hundred miles north of Milton.

Very early in the morning of Sept. 26th, through the kind aid of Bro. Ephraim B. Swinney, six of us were taken from Walnut to Marengo in Illinois, a distance of twenty-two miles. Here we parted with a relative who had journeyed with us from Akron, N. Y., seeking a Western home, near Marengo, and where he might effectually aid the cause. For seven or eight years he with his family had kept Sabbath in Upper Canada; for twenty years he has been connected with the church in Clarence. He is the first Sabbatarian we ever conversed with on the Sabbath question. His quiet persuasive manner, accompanied with a few plain questions, put two of our first-day ministers to our wits to answer; indeed, we could not answer satisfactorily to ourselves, but privately resolved to investigate the subject at a more convenient season. This was six years ago. Since then a change has come over us. The one whom we had been taught to regard as having labored strange, if not unscriptural notions of the Sabbath, we now look upon as doing the will of God.

Our friend, in company with others, left M. homeward bound, via Chicago. Arrived at Freeport, sixty or sixty-five miles west of Marengo, and the then terminus of the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad, we at 3 P. M. got into a crowded stage for Saranac, 24 miles southwest of Freeport. Our course by railroad was mostly through prairie land; a good portion of which is yet uncultivated. For twenty miles our route by stage was one wild undulating prairie, with only here and there a house, but wherever a field of corn was to be seen, there was indisputable proof of an exceedingly rich soil. At 1 o'clock A. M., instead of 10 P. M., as was promised us, we reached Saranac, and found, to our surprise and disappointment, that the steamer had left one hour previous. After a detention of fifteen hours, we set out for Keithsburg, per steamer Lamartine—distance, 50 miles down the river. Through frequent landings for freight, we did not reach K. till the morning of the 29th! The freight taken on board consisted of 500 barrels of flour, 2000 bushels of potatoes, 4000 bushels of onions, and a large lot of merchandise. Feeling that we ought to be put through in one day from Marengo, we were quite impatient at this tedious delay.

Let's see how you and Talk Together.

untilful Passage.

multifal Passage:

shall have redeeming ity, Earth."

Tobacco

from the air above, in a careless and perfectly unobserved manner. He then became a tenant of a neighboring pig-pen, and after stirring up its inmates, who received their guest with sundry grunts and squeals, and no doubt surprised at this unexpected midnight visit, he left them, and resumed his more dan-which 141,119,347 is under cultivation. The land tax realizes 27,854,023 taels of silver; the salt revenue, 4,618,834 taels; and

Strawberries

The Cost of a Bad Habit

It is supposed that he has come westward, as he had frequently hinted during his confinement, that he had a considerable amount of money buried in the vicinity of Hamilton.

[illegible]

VARIETY.

He who labors for mankind, without a care for himself, has already begun his immortality.

Number of hauls	A. balearicum (%)	A. balearicum + A. balearicum + A. balearicum (%)
1	100	0
2	50	50
3	33	67
4	25	75
5	20	80
6	17	83
7	14	86
8	12	88
9	11	89
10	10	90

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOS. B. BROWN.

—THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD.—

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. X.—NO. 35.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 1, 1883.

WHOLE NO. 493.

The Sabbath Recorder.

NARRATIVE OF ELIZABETH WILSON.

BY WILLIAM H. FLEMING, A. M.

It has been correctly remarked, by a distinguished writer, that "truth is stranger than fiction," which is verified in innumerable unvarnished histories of the bleeding heart in private life, and the untold tales in the quiet walks of humble society; and although the sad fate of Elizabeth Wilson has, at times, attracted much interest, and even vague inklings of her history have been woven into popular fictions, yet her true, unvarnished story, is replete with instruction and admonition to the young, and even to the more advanced in life, far beyond those narrow, ephemeral, fancy sketches; and as it has been the lot of the writer to be thrown into frequent intercourse with several persons somewhat familiar with her case, or prominently connected, in some manner, with the sad drama, I have frequently been tempted, for thirty years past, to pen a cursory notice of her touching narrative—a narrative so much calculated as any work of the imagination can possibly prove, to enforce the Scriptural admonition, "the way of transgressors is hard," and "the wages of sin is death," in their most trying, in their most fearful phases; in penning which I wish to add, that I derived all the prominent facts from the most reliable and most authentic sources, namely, 1st, From Elder Florence, an aged Baptist minister, usually called "Father Florence," who was her spiritual adviser, and who attended her in her last moments—a devout Christian man, highly respected in his denomination, and who was called to his rest more than a quarter of a century since; 2d, From James Trimble, Esq., Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, from the formation of the State Government, in 1790, till some fifteen or eighteen years since, and who was Secretary of the Provincial Council at the time the case of Elizabeth Wilson came before that body for its action; and, 3d, From my own grandfather's family, with whom the brother of Elizabeth, William Wilson, resided at the period in which her history lies.

Elizabeth Wilson, a beautiful and lovely girl, who flourished during the latter part of the Revolutionary War, descended from highly respectable parents, in an humble sphere of life, in Delaware County, Pennsylvania, whose only misfortune was their poverty; yet, with little of this world's goods, scarcely any one in the Province possessed more upright, honest hearts, than both her parents. They toiled, under many restricting circumstances, which it is not necessary to rehearse, for a livelihood, and to maintain an honorable and unblemished reputation; indeed, so rigid were they to the line of probity and rectitude, in all matters, that their stern sense of correct bearing, was proverbial, and all persons, high and low, bowed to their elevated estimate of character and integrity.

In such a school was the beautiful and lovely Elizabeth Wilson, a beloved and cherished child, educated. No parent could be fonder of an offspring, and none labored more indefatigably to give their child a good education, and instill into her mind and heart, true nobility of character, and the purifying principles of the Gospel of their Divine Redeemer. She grew into womanhood the pride of her parents and the admiration of the whole neighborhood in which they lived, some twenty miles from the city of Philadelphia.

At the time the British Army occupied Philadelphia, she made a visit to some friends in that city, and attracted a great deal of attention. Her relatives favoring the Tory or English Party, she was thrown into frequent intercourse with several of the British officers, who constantly visited her friends. Their attentions and flatteries intoxicated Elizabeth's unsophisticated mind; and after her return home, she became restless and unhappy. Anxious, all the while, to renew her visit to the city, against which so many obstacles were raised, by her parents, at length, manage their remonstrances and their insuperable objections, she left her home clandestinely, and went to an acquaintance, who was, formerly, from her own neighborhood in the country, but who now kept the old "Indian Queen Hotel" in the city; at which several of the English officers, with whom she had become acquainted on her former visit, boarded, and rendered some service in the affairs of the house, to have a guestier support.

Prior to Elizabeth's first visit to the city, for five years, from sixteen to twenty-one years of age, she was deeply exercised on the subject of religion, and gave many evidences of truly loving the Lord, but never made a public profession of her faith. Immediately after settling out for the city, her good old father and mother followed her, to induce her to return to their roof; but she resisted every persuasion, every entreaty, and persisted in remaining where she might enjoy the benefits of society, as she regarded it.

little acquainted with the ways of the world, too unsuspecting, to understand all this seduction, until she found it proved her ruin. How few poor, beautiful girls, ever discern the cloven foot of such attentions, until they are left to mourn their folly. So it proved with Elizabeth Wilson. The apparently brightest gentleman and the bravest soldier, Captain Deshong, won her heart and her entire confidence; of which he took an undue, a dishonorable, a damnable advantage. In a word, when he had gained her heart, he basely robbed her of her honor.

I stop not to portray the sad, and state of one in such circumstances, nor to trace the process by which a virtuous girl accomplishes her selfish purposes. The sad fact disclosed itself, and she was turned into the street to wander about, helpless, destitute, degraded, and almost dying of a broken heart.

A thousand emotions of her anguished breast might be portrayed, and a thousand scenes of poignant degradation might be depicted, in which she drank the very dregs of insult and contumely, until worn down to the lowest condition of wretchedness to which a woman, retaining some sense of propriety, can be reduced; yet I have no desire to give my pen to the wiles of a perfidious dastard, nor harrow up the vain regrets of an injured one; it must suffice, that she was a poor stricken creature, without feeling one to pity or one to aid her in her extremity; and when so prostrated by exposure and oppressive infirmity, she, in her desperation, brook herself to a market wagon just leaving the city, one afternoon, and reached her father's house late in the night.

On arriving at the gate leading to her paternal roof, which stood a short distance from the public road, she could scarcely crawl to the old cottage; and when she reached the threshold, she sank on the step, in intense agony, and was unable to knock for admittance. Her moanings, however, awoke her good old parents, who had not seen any thing of her, nor had any special tidings of her for more than a whole year; but hearing the window inquired, "Who's there?" "A poor sick woman," was the laconic reply, uttered, evidently, by one in much anguish. They knew not who she was; but the reply was enough—it was a suffering, helpless fellow mortal, and they went down stairs, immediately, and opened the door, so it was a bright moonlight night. They found her in writhing agonies, unable to speak, and took her in and laid her on a cushion, without recognizing her. There she lay, a poor, haggard wreck, suffering almost the agonies of death, while the old gentlemen went to light a candle. As the light was brought into the room, Elizabeth, in the throes of intense pain, caught a glimpse of her mother's face, and revealed herself, by exclaiming: "O mother! O mother!" Her mother sank to the floor, and her father, simultaneously, threw himself into a high-back chair, both overwhelmed with the discovery of her being their child, and they both continued almost insensible, a short time, until roused by the cries of two babes, of which Elizabeth had just become the mother.

Dark hours, dark hours—and nights, and nights—bleeding hearts, bleeding hearts—for days and weeks, and months and months, stretched upon father, and mother, and daughter.

Elizabeth had become somewhat accustomed to insult and reproach, but her old parents, her upright, self-conscious parents, who had never dreamed of such a disgrace entering their door, were grieved to the very heart. The iron entered their hearts—they smiled no more—they spoke no more in their wretched tones—and cheerless, in the darkest corners of the house, they sat and wept and wept for weeks and months alone.

Soon as Elizabeth had gained sufficient strength to reach the city, she mounted her father's horse one morning before day light, and set off in search of her destroyer and seducer, who had been ordered to some other station, or who had voluntarily absented himself, on the plea of orders, just before Elizabeth's situation was discovered. On her arrival at the "Indian Queen," she found Captain Deshong, who affected to be pleased to see her; and having spent a few hours together, she again recovered her horse, and reached her father's house and impatient babes late in the evening.

The following Sunday, after her parents had gone to church, she dressed herself and her babes, and started down the road towards Newtown Corner; leaving word that she had gone to be married. No more was heard of the marriage of Elizabeth, or of her babes, until some weeks afterward, a hunter, or rather his hounds, discovered two murdered infants concealed under a fallen tree; which proved to be Elizabeth's twins. They were taken to her father's house, where they were fully recognized, and a Coroner's Jury was held on them; who, without any hesitation, charged the guilt on the absent mother.

Alas! who can tell the agony, the poignant agony, an unfeeling, an ungrateful child, may inflict on her fond, doing parents. It was not enough that their wayward child had brought disgrace upon herself, and sorrow, the saddest sorrow, upon her aged parents; but now to become a murderers—no! to imbue her own hands in the blood of her illicit progeny, was a cruelty, a perfidy, not to be entertained by the lowest grade of human being; but that was the case to which Elizabeth brought her good, her indignant old parents. What a commentary—what a sad example for parental tenderness and devotion! Who can understand a parent's anxiety, and who understand a parent's wrongs, from an inconsiderate, an ungrateful child!

An outrage of such enormity, and of such a person as Elizabeth Wilson, roused the whole community; and, after a diligent search, she was arrested and committed to the jail in Chester. To no one did she make any revelation of the horrid crime—so no one would she open her mouth, though constantly over-whelmed with tears, and evidently penitent. She did nothing but weep and utter ejaculations for mercy from on high.

The County Sessions soon adjourned. The Grand Jury found a true bill against her, and she was arraigned for trial. To the indictment she made no reply, pro se. To the inquiry from the Judge, "Whether she had any Counsel?" she made no answer; a shower of tears and an ejaculation to her Savior for mercy, was her only reply. The Court put in the plea of "Not Guilty, and to be tried;" and likewise appointed Counsel for her. Her Counsel asked for delay of the case until next day, that he might have a confidential interview with her, and prepare for trial, which was readily granted.

On entering the Court next morning, her Counsel announced that he did not know what course to pursue; that with all his exertions, and all his warnings to his client, he could not win her extort a single word from her. He felt confident that there was something exceedingly strange—something very peculiar, in the case, which induced him to ask postponement to the next Sessions. Judge Allen, seeing that the issue must be fatal, in the goodness of his heart, deferred the trial until the next term.

Meanwhile, every effort was made to obtain some clue to the mystery which appeared to enshroud the case; but to no one would Elizabeth open her mouth on the subject. Her father and mother could see her no more. In their estimation she had disgraced herself, dishonored them, and forfeited all claims to her kindred.

The Sessions again returned, and Elizabeth was put on the stand for trial. To all that was said, and all that was done, Elizabeth was immovably silent. save her touching tears. No one, say, not any one, could win or extort a single word, but her frequent ejaculations, to her Redeemer, for mercy. The evidence was decidedly against her. Her Counsel had not any testimony to advance, nor any thing to rebut what had been presented by the prosecution. The crowded court-room was intensely agitated by the strange reserve of Elizabeth; and the Attorney-General gave the case to the Jury, on the evidence, without a remark, and left her Counsel to make the best appeal to the sympathies of the Court and Jury; for all persons present, by this time, felt intensely in regard to the issue of the case; heightened by the very singular, the very mysterious position of the prisoner.

Her Counsel did all that man could do in the circumstances. He was learned—he was logical—he was eloquent—practically eloquent—he kept the Judge, and the Jury, and all the bystanders, in tears for hours; but he could not gain any particle of the testimony adduced by the prosecution; which, of course, must be fatal, for Jurors are sworn to decide according to the testimony, and not by their own individual feelings, or the eloquence of Counsel.

Judge Allen, in charging the Jury, called upon Elizabeth to communicate any thing to exonerate the crime, which should be used to her advantage, and warning her of her very prominent position; yet she uttered no word, save, "Jesus have mercy on me—have mercy on me," and flooded her face with streams of tears.

The Jury, after a few hours' deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty of Murder in the First Degree," and she was sentenced to be executed on the sixth day of December ensuing.

The poor criminal was closely confined to her solitary cell, to prepare for her awful doom. She was attended daily by Elder Florence, and another minister, who informed the writer, that they, through a long life, never witnessed stronger evidences of deep penitence, and richer expressions of soul, in any inquirer looking heavenward, save her imperturbable silence in reference to the crime. The only thing that excited her fears was her obstinate concealment of the facts or circumstances connected with the murder, while she asserted her innocence of the act or any agency in it. All their efforts to enlighten her on the moral bearing of the transaction, while she conceived any thing of the matter, proved futile—useless—she maintained the same imperturbable, dogged silence, though she was willing to die for the crime. Notwithstanding they were confounded by her unbroken silence on the main point, still they believed her perfectly innocent, from her deep humility, her great and faithful weeping in prayer, and her uncomprehending submission. Many of her impromptu exercises of heart were preserved by the attending clergymen, and many of her sad, and emotions of soul, which she recorded on scraps of paper in her solitary moments, were preserved, and put of which, fully justify their opinion of her perfect innocence.

While the foregoing matters were transpiring, and Elizabeth was entirely desisted by all her family, a favorite brother, William, whom she had not seen for years, and who was residing with the writer's grandfather, in a retired part of Lancaster county, had not heard any thing of the degradation of his sister; yet, while engaged one day, at his ordinary pursuit, came suddenly to a stand, dropped his work, and announced to his companions, that he must go to Delaware county immediately; and went to the house to prepare for his journey. To all the inquiries of the family, who esteemed him very highly, and to whom he was very much attached, respecting his purpose, and especially the suddenness of his determination, his only reply was, "I do not know—I must go and see what it is." He started within an hour after his first determination, with only a change of clothing, promising to be back within a week.

On his arrival at the desolate cottage of his aged parents, he first learned of his sister's disgrace and ignominious doom. After hearing the sad recital of her folly and her guilt, he expressed a desire to go to Chester and see her. To this his parents objected decidedly. His father's sturdy, Puritanical principles—his high, his unyielding adherence to correct deportment, and his dislike to any appearance of participating in, or in any way giving countenance to the crime, or the criminal, forbade it positively.

It would occupy too much space, in a simple sketch, to embody the arguments of the father and the son on this point; for the mother, the yearning mother secretly sided, with William, though she did not dare to express it. Notwithstanding the old gentleman's inexorable objections to William's visit, he persisted in the determination, which impelled him on to Chester, to ascertain something of Elizabeth, and the opinion abroad respecting her; however, with an almost positive promise to his parents, not to see his sister.

For several days before, as I learned from Elder Florence, the great burden of Elizabeth's prayers, was, that the Lord would direct her brother William to her in her great extremity. This was her incessant, her wrestling prayer, for days and nights preceding that period. On entering Chester, two days before the time appointed for her execution, he heard much said on the subject, and much of that, to interest him, for he found all persons sympathizing deeply with his sister, while some single being uttered a harsh word against her. Listening about without making himself known to any one, he approached the prison walls, and while passing underneath a grassed well, he heard the suppliant voice of his impenitent sister, earnestly beseeching the Lord's interposition for an interview with her brother William.

In an instant he bounded to the prison door, and made himself known to the Sheriff, who ushered him into Elizabeth's cell, while yet she and the two clergymen remained engaged in prayer. So soon as composure was restored after a surprise of this nature, and under such peculiar circumstances, she proposed a private interview with her brother. He replied, that if it was a purely personal matter, he would cheerfully do so, and engage to do any thing the might desire; but if it had any connection with the crime, he could not hear her except before two or more witnesses.

Together with the two clergymen, the Sheriff, Judge Allen, the Prosecuting Attorney, and her own Counsel, were immediately introduced, and she revealed the whole matter. The following is the substance of her statement: On her hurried trip to Philadelphia, on horseback, I have already mentioned, she met Deshong, her destroyer; he appeared to sympathize with her, and made an arrangement to meet her at Newtown Corner on the next Sunday, to marry her, and provide for her children; but, contrary to her expectations, he met her in advance, two miles from her home, along the road leading through a dense wood. When they met, he accosted her kindly, and led her a little way into the woods to rest on a log. She went with him a short distance and sat down on a felled tree, with both her children in her arms. He asked for one of the children, to see whether it looked like him; after a little pause, he laid the infant on the ground, then snatching the other one from her, laid it beside his fellow innocent. He then requested her to take their lives; which she peremptorily refused to do; but begged him to spare them, and let her take care of them herself, which she was willing to do, even had she to beg bread for them. He gruffly replied, that "he had no money for a stranger nor her baste;" and presenting a pistol to her breast, forbade her to utter a word at the peril of her life, and then wickedly stamped on their little breasts until they were entirely dead; and still keeping the pistol at her breast, he forced her solemnly to swear, on peril of her life and her soul's eternal torture, that she would never reveal the dreadful act; to which she, through fear, consented. "To the truth of this statement," she added, "I appeal to the Searcher of Hearts, before whose dread tribunal I am to appear next day after to-morrow."

The foregoing declaration being placed in the form of an affidavit, and attested by the Clergymen, the Sheriff, the Judge, and the Prosecuting Attorney, William started off with all speed to Philadelphia; and had it presented to the Provincial Council, in which body the pardoning power was then vested. The Council granted a respite for four weeks, to give themselves time to inquire into the matter, and as it was customary in such cases, attached a Death Warrant, in the event that they should not deem it proper to extend any further clemency. William carried the joyful tidings to Chester, and then returned to the City to attend to affairs before the Committee, to whom the matter had been referred. After bringing before the Committee a number of persons, of highest respectability, to establish as far as could be done, the probability of the statement, and fortify it by testimonials of previous good character, the Chairman of the Committee told William, that he might return home and rest assured that a full pardon would be decreed. On this assurance William returned to his employment on the farm of the writer's grandfather, with the arrangement, that Elizabeth should follow him to Lancaster county as soon as released; where he would provide for her, and immediately made arrangements to give her a home, away from the scenes and the taints of her folly.

Not hearing from Elizabeth as was arranged, he became very uneasy as the expiration of the respite approached, and two days before that period he left, again, as precipitately as before, for Chester. He arrived at that place about noon the day before the expiration of the respite, and not finding a pardon nor any tidings of it from the Sheriff, or any one in authority, he set off to the city, after being several hours in hopeless search for the promised document.

It was after midnight when he got there. The Council had adjourned until the next morning; but on applying to the Chairman of the Committee, who had charge of the affair, and whom he found in a sick chamber, he was informed, that the Committee had agreed unanimously to grant a full pardon; but that he had been taken very ill, and had continued so for weeks, through which it had not been brought before the Council for final action. He further informed him, that the Report and accompanying papers were in his desk in the Council Chamber, and directed him what course to pursue to have it acted upon without delay.

It was now getting late in the evening, and it could not be delayed until the assembling of the Council next day. Upon this representation Dr. Franklin, the President of the Council, summoned a special session, at a late hour of the night, amid the most inclement storm—do inclement and so rainy, that it was with the utmost difficulty a quorum could be gotten together by midnight.

It took but a few minutes to dispatch the business. The Report was read and adopted, and the Pardon fully consummated, and handed to her kind brother; but it was impossible for him to get across the Schuylkill at that time of night, and in such a pelting storm, there being no bridge at that day.

Next morning, as day dawned, William was at the Ferry House, knocking most busily for the ferryman; but it rained and stormed faster and faster, and the banks of the river were greatly overflowed, while the stream in the channel was rushing down in a most violent torrent—so wild and furious, that no one would venture to cross the stream.

All his exertions, all he could proffer, would not, could not, tempt the hardest of the most reckless men to cross; and after waiting and suing in vain until within two hours of the expiration of the respite, he plunged into the stream, on his charger, with the pardon in his hat, secured by a handkerchief under his chin. The horse labored valiantly against the swirling current, but meeting not only the irresistible force of the wild waters and frightful whirlpools, heavy pieces of timber came pelting him from above, and turned him out of his course, time after time, until the noble animal became exhausted and sunk; leaving William to struggle with the raging elements and the terrific current. The utmost interest and consternation prevailed at this moment, among the beholders on the shore, great numbers of whom had gathered, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, to see the swollen stream, and the daring effort of the devoted brother. With a profusion that few men could boast, he battled manfully against the fabled waters, and eventually made the opposite shore; but not until he had been swept nearly two miles from the place where he entered the stream. After a considerable loss of time, he procured another horse, and set out at full gallop for Chester.

About noon the storm abated, and no pardon having arrived, the painful duty of the kind Sheriff became imperative, and he proceeded to the place of execution, attended by a large number of persons, who had been confident, up to that moment, that the revolting scene of executing a woman, a young, beautiful, and much injured woman, would be averted; and so confident were they that Elizabeth's brother would yet arrive with the pardon, and so reluctant was the Sheriff to proceed, that he not only determined to delay the execution until the last moment of specified time in the Death Warrant, but sent out several deputies, appointed, qualified and instructed for the occasion, to occupy the road at proper distances for a few miles towards Philadelphia, to give signal with white flags upon inspection of the document, should William approach at the last instant, and formed an avenue through the crowd to be kept open by the constables, to facilitate access to the High Officer of the County on reaching the solemn scene.

The time, to the last minute, was occupied in religious exercises—solenn, solemn worship; but the multitude saw little, and heard less of it, for their eyes were, all, gazing to the distance of the road, in the hope of catching a glimpse of William, or the signal of his approach.

The last moment arrived. Elizabeth stood up and confirmed the statement she had previously made, on the testimony of a dying woman; and then, folding her hands across her breast, called upon the Lord in these words: "O Lord, have mercy on my poor soul, and shed an eye of pity on thy poor servant, begging for mercy for her never-dying spirit. O Lord of life and glory, turn out thy ear from me in this hour of my great trial. O God, thou knowest my heart—thou knowest my heart is broken within me. O, my heavenly Father, I have sinned against thee—but on my iniquities. For the Redeemer's sake have mercy, have mercy, have mercy." The last moment had arrived, and she was swung off, (for in those days they had no drop,) but not half the multitude were aware of it, so intently were they gazing down the road towards the city, still hoping to see her brother appear.

A solemn, awful stillness followed, and was unbrokenly preserved for fifteen minutes; not a whisper was uttered; every eye ran over; every mouth was dumb, save muffled sobbings, and every foot riveted. A star was suddenly discovered, and a simultaneous beam issued from the multitude—a deep, heart-penetrating moan. They saw the signal in the distance—it waved—again, it waved—they all waved—and in a few minutes William was seen coming at full speed, holding a paper as high up as his arm could reach. The Sheriff cut the rope immediately—but the vital spark had become extinct—entirely gone. William got there just twenty-three minutes too late.

After rendering all the tender offices in any man's power, to the remains of his beloved sister, William retired from the scene of life, and desiring to live no longer in painful intercourse with his fellow men, betook himself to the Cane-wagon Mountains, and, selecting one of its wildest and most secluded parts, spent the remainder of his days in a cell, solitary and alone. He occupied his time in dressing grind-stones, which he hewed out from the many rocks around him, and which he traded with a merchant, Mr. Wolfenberger, of Campbelltown, a few miles off, who supplied him with the necessities of life. He lived to a very advanced age, and died in the year 1819.

Such is the sad, unvarnished tale of Elizabeth Wilson. I have adhered, literally, so far as my excellent opportunities to obtain correct information have afforded me access to the facts in the case, not varying or embellishing a single point, save one passage of no moment in the early part of my sketch. Had my design been to pen a fiction, the narrative would have afforded me abundant matter to run it into a novel, by filling up the parts supplied, by artifice with dialogue and discussions on ethical subjects. From so sad a recital, my readers cannot fail to draw some very salutary lessons. One or two, certainly, must impress themselves upon every reflecting mind. 1st. The sin and the evil consequences resulting from disobedience to parents. Had Elizabeth heeded her parents' advice and good instructions, had she appreciated their prayers and earnest solicitude for her temporal and eternal welfare, she would have been preserved from her infamy and an ignominious end. All her sufferings, and all her ignominy, arose, unquestionably, from disobedience to parental advice and parental authority. 2d. The next great lesson is, the evil attendant upon resisting the stirrings of the Spirit of God. For five years, at the earnest stirrings of the Spirit, doubtless in answer to the wrestling prayers of her devoted parents, she resisted the Spirit of Grace to her own destruction. 3d. The narrative instructs us, in fearful lines, that earth is not the theatre of retributive justice. The innocent victim, here, is oftentimes made to suffer for the crime of the vicious and debased, while the polluted, villain and the hardened wretch escape unpunished.

The truthful Golden Rule shadowed forth more than a poetic feeling, yes, a profound philosophical and religious truth, in the following stanza:—
"When I truly woman stoops to folly,
And looks too late, how time is flown,
And when she sees that she has made her folly
What can she wish but to be wiser?"
The only art left to us, to cry out,
To bid her shun from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover,
And wring his bosom to a die."

In consonance with this sentiment, and in the greatest kindness, Providence, doubtless, permitted all the untoward events in the premises, for Elizabeth's best good, after the diligently sought His face sorrowing. Mysterious as are the dealings of Him who cannot err, and mysterious as they may appear to some persons in this instance, yet, unquestionably, the Lord suffered all matters pertaining to the above and lesson, after the counsel of His will, and after the highest wisdom. Had Elizabeth been saved, she would only have been saved to remorse and confusion of face; which she could never have effaced. She would have become a by-word and a reproach in every community, wherever she might go; but, having yielded to the Lord's behest—to give Him her heart—also too late for her earthly good, but not too late for his mercy and pardon; and having been raptured for a higher and a better state of existence, He, in mercy, saved her from suffering continually here below, and introduced her into regions of unalloyed bliss, where neither tam, nor reproach, nor sorrow, is ever known.
Salem, N. J., Nov. 10, 1883.

THE POPE'S BULL.

This name, which is now applied exclusively to instruments issuing out of the Roman Chancery, is derived from the seals which were appended to them, being formerly of gold bullion. Bulls were not originally confined to the Pope alone, but were also issued by emperors, princes, bishops, and great men, who, till the thirteenth century, sometimes affixed seals of metal, as well as of wax, to edicts, charters, and other instruments, though they were equally called bulls, whether they were sealed with one or the other. The pope continues to the present day to affix metal or lead seals to their bulls, and only when they wish to bestow any particular marks of grace and favor on sovereigns or princes, are seals of bullion or gold affixed. The bull of Pope Clement VII., conferring the title of Defender of the Faith on Henry VIII., had a seal of gold affixed to it. Bulls containing matter of grace and favor were suspended by strings of red and yellow silk; but denunciatory and punitive bulls were hung by hempen cords.

A GOOD REPLY.—A Sunday-School teacher, instructing his class on that portion of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," said to them, "You have told me, my dear children, what is to be done, the will of God; and where it is to be done, on earth; and how it is to be done, as it is in heaven. Now do you think the angels and the happy spirits do the will of God in heaven, as they are to be our pattern?" The first child replied, "They do it constantly." The second, "They do it diligently." The third, "They do it always." The fourth, "They do it with all the heart." The fifth, "They do it altogether." Here a pause ensued, and no child appeared to have an answer; but after some time, a little girl arose, and said, "Why, sir, they do it without asking any question."

The best bred man is he who is possessed of dignified ease to reconcile him to all circumstances and society.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 1, 1853.

JOHN B. LUTHER, Editor.
JAMES B. LUTHER, Editor.
T. E. BARKER, Editor.
T. E. BARKER, Editor.
T. E. BARKER, Editor.

S. S. G. ON "TRACT DISTRIBUTION."

Two communications have appeared in the Recorder, one writing upon our article of the 27th of October. The writer appears to be a good deal disturbed, because we have suggested that the colportage of ministers is not absolutely necessary to carry out the design of the resolution adopted at the late anniversary of the Tract Society. Number One sets forth his argument on this point, and Number Two furnishes an account of a lecture upon the Sabbath by Mr. Crandall. But what the latter has to do with the subject, we are at a loss to conceive, unless the writer supposes that our remarks had some covert allusion to Mr. C.—a supposition which is justified, neither by the paragraph excepted to, nor by anything else that we have written. The account of Mr. C.'s lecture may be well enough, as an item of intelligence, we have no objection to it. But the use made of it by our correspondent is, to say the least, gratuitous. It was not necessary to set up a defense on Mr. C.'s behalf, for we had not said him.

We are a little surprised at the misconstruction put upon our article by Bro. G. To him, it "appears" as if we were opposed to Sabbath Lectures, and that in their stead colportage and tract distribution. Surely, the brother did not read carefully. The very sentence which he quoted as sustaining such a conclusion, contains a distinct admission that "something of this kind is valuable." We do not say that Sabbath Lectures should be wholly abandoned, and it requires no small share of candor to twist our language into any such meaning. All we ask is, that under strictness not laid upon them. For it is a fact, that a large number of people attach much importance to this kind of labor, that they are ready to withdraw from his more ordinary work in order to send him round the country, touring and dispensing upon this one favorite topic, the Sabbath. This, in our opinion, is the subject too much prominent. It is a subject of importance above the ordinary work of preaching the gospel, and tends to strengthen the impression, already too prevalent, that the great end of all our religious activity is to bring men to the observance of the Sabbath. We do not want to see our ministry diverted from the work of daily caring for the souls committed to their charge; and in order to carry out the design contemplated by the Tract Society, it is not necessary that they should be. And all that we intended by our remarks which have called forth our correspondent, was to show that there was no necessity for it—that the churches had all the requisite agency within themselves for fulfilling what the resolution of the Anniversary contemplated, notwithstanding the small number of ministers—that there were honest, devoted, amiable brethren, who might engage in the work, and whose quiet, unobtrusive manner, accompanied with prayer to the Lord, would, in a majority of cases, be a better purpose than open controversy. Which too often engenders a state of feeling, calculated to calm investigation.

It is not that we are opposed to occasional lectures, given by ministers, that we have written as we have. But we wish to impress it upon churches, that, whether ministers can be had for the purpose or not, the work can be done. Nay, more; we wish to impress it upon the public, that argument is not all that is required. In some cases there has been too much of it. What is more needed is prayer, which nobly supposes, that they must continue to argue a point, as long as there is any chance of opposition; as if mere logic would silence the cavils of an unwilling heart. But we are quite certain that, in thousands of instances, opposing gainsay the truth, not so much because they do not understand it, as because it interferes with their carnal desires; and, of the mere desire to invent some excuse for opposing in sin, they will hold on in argument, and show opposition, which might better be met with "Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God?" than with any prolonged discussion. There is needed, in all cases, a much argument as is necessary to state the subject clearly. Any thing beyond this tends to draw the mind away from the contemplation of simply what God has spoken to that which is merely human. When God's truth has been once stated clearly and intelligibly, the next resort should be to prayer. For the work of converting men to the Sabbath is to be God's work, rather than ours; and if we do not learn to consider it so, and act accordingly, God will frown upon us, and men will mock, and we shall continue to be the unimproved, insignificant, despised people, that we always have been.

It is because we are firm believers in the efficacy of prayer, and are satisfied that nothing short of God's power will suffice to render men obedient to the truth, that we can see in the quiet diligence of the colporteur, accompanied with fervent supplications to Heaven, a more efficient agency, in the majority of cases, than prolonged argumentative efforts. In so expressing ourselves, we take for granted, of course, that the Tract themselves contain a sufficiently clear statement of the truth. If they do not, let them be revised, or their places supplied by others more judiciously written.

We do not see the force of the view presented by our correspondent, that what we have written "may with equal propriety be said against the preaching of the gospel." He that would take that method of preaching the gospel which stirs up angry opposition, when another method would answer quite as well, would display very little of the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove. If opposition must come—if there is no alternative—let it come; but certainly it is not to be courted, as the necessary means of doing good. Besides, we have a special command to go every where preaching the gospel, but we have no such command to go every where lecturing upon the Sabbath. If it be replied, that the Sabbath is a part of the gospel, and therefore included in the great commission, we admit that in an extended sense of the term gospel, as including not only the good news of salvation by the blood of Christ, but also all moral duties, it is a part of it. It must, therefore, receive a proportional share of the preacher's attention. But when, instead of presenting it in connection with other duties, and with the plan of salvation, we single it out as a topic to be presented by itself, we are not so restricted as to the method of doing it, but what we may take that which seems to us most expedient.

The design of our correspondent, evidently, is to make it appear, that the aversion created by Sabbath lecturing is of the same nature with that manifested towards the preaching of the gospel. But this is a view that needs to be scrutinized a little. The manner of the speaker often has as much to do in calling forth the opposition of his hearers, as the matter which he presents. In regard to the preaching of Paul, of Peter, and of the Apostles generally, we must suppose, in the absence of testimony to the contrary, that their manner was unexceptionable. Hence, the opposition of their hearers was simple hatred of the truth. Indeed, in regard to their manner, we have clear testimony, that it evoked a "longing after souls in the bowels of Jesus Christ," (Phil. 1: 8); "meekness in instructing those that opposed themselves," (2 Tim. 2: 24); "great heaviness and continued sorrow of heart" on their account, (Rom. 9: 2); "gentleness, even as a nurse towards her children, willing to impart, not the gospel of God only, but also their own souls," (1 Thess. 2: 7, 8); "enduring all things for the elect's sake," (2 Tim. 2: 10); and "warning every one day and night with tears," (Acts 20: 31).

A like manner of presenting the Sabbath question would, undoubtedly, be followed by great advantages; it would, certainly, take away all ground for supposing that the opposition made to it is any thing else but opposition to God's truth. And if there was any thing in the history of the past, or in the signs of the present, to justify the impression that the subject would be presented in this manner, we would say, Let Sabbath lectures be multiplied to almost any extent. But there is, probably, not one of us so entirely free from party feeling, and so completely emptied of all selfishness, that we can go about the country, and discuss this one subject day after day, and night after night, making it (in fact) our whole business, without falling so much into the spirit of mere sectarianism as greatly to prejudice the cause. For it seems to be a well established fact, that even Christians cannot engage in the defense of some one doctrinal peculiarity, and give their entire attention to it, without becoming so permeated and saturated therewith, as to have scarce any thing else to exhibit as the evidence of their piety; in which case they are properly chargeable with sectarianism, notwithstanding the point for which they contend is a part of God's revealed will. Witness our Baptist brethren, with many of whom the initiative ordinance of the gospel as fills the eye and heart, that their chief merit as Christians consists in being thorough-paced, zealous-hearted Baptists. Not that they are not very worthy people in other respects also, but the outgoings of their zeal are almost invariably in this one direction. We Sabbatharians are prone to the same failing with regard to our own denominational peculiarity; and there is no man among us so elevated above human infirmity, that he can devote his attention to this one subject, without falling into that sectarianism of manner which produces in his hearers a state of feeling highly unfavorable to candid investigation—a feeling which is more than mere opposition to the truth, such as is made by the wicked to the preaching of gospel; it is rather a feeling of disgust, which renders further attempts at instruction useless.

Now be it understood, that we are not opposed to Sabbath lecturing. We have occasionally done something at it ourselves; and, if Providence so order, we shall do it again. But, we apprehend, it may be carried to an extreme. For, notwithstanding the vast importance of the Sabbath Institution, it is not the all in all of religion. It is not in the keeping of it, that lost sinners find their redemption. And though it may be one part of our mission to announce, that the blessing of Israel's God will rest upon those who keep the Sabbath from polluting it, our great and leading duty is that which devolves upon all who have tasted that the Lord is gracious; namely, to preach redemption through the blood of Jesus.

Before closing, we want to say, that the statement by Bro. G. of his "solemn protest against the unmerited approbation which aims at the champions of truth, the defenders of God's law, the scourge of bull-dog-fighters, disputers, &c.," is wholly gratuitous. Such epithets have not been applied in the columns of the Recorder, at least, not in its editorials, and we have no recollection of their being used by any of our correspondents.

One thing more. It never entered our mind, while we were penning our editorial of Oct. 27th, that Bro. G. himself had been a Sabbath lecturer.

"SUNDAY CORN."

The article from the Investigator, headed "Sunday Corn," deserves more attention. It is as follows:—

"My two acres of Sunday Corn, that I promised to raise for the purpose of buying Liberal Books with the proceeds of the sale, I have not harvested yet, but I think it will yield about seventy bushels per acre. It stands about twelve feet high, and all the work was done on Sunday. I don't see but what Nature or Providence has smiled upon my Sunday work, though the priests tell us that no labor performed on that day ever prospers; my two acres of corn tell another story."

God does not change the order of nature to prevent men by force from hating and disobeying him. That Sunday Corn man may also lift his head in proud blasphemy against God, and still be prospered in raising corn, under the blessing of Him who has declared that seed time and harvest shall continue till the end of all things. But every such blasphemer should know, that God as well as man will have a harvest season, when the good shall be gathered, and the bad thrown away, or burned up. Until his harvest is gathered, and is converted into "Liberal Books," and these have done their work, the full amount due the man is not manifest. It will probably be a much greater harvest than the man supposed he was bagging for. The bragging was too soon. In all this he may be treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and find that he has presumed too much on the mercy of God, in using the products of His earth to curse His name.

Again, there can be no sin in the act of planting, cultivating, and harvesting corn on Sunday, because there is no law of religion forbidding it. Yet, if a man perform an act for the sake of defying the God of religion, though the act may not be sinful of itself, yet, in thus performing it, he becomes a sinner. It is not sinful to secularize Sunday, yet it becomes a sin for a man to secularize it who believes God require as it to be kept holy, for in so doing he shows his hostility to God's government. A remedy would be found for the "Sunday Corn" man, and all Sabbath breakers, in fearing God and keeping his commandments.

MAINE LAW—A LOGICAL ARGUMENT.

The Legislature should rescind the present License Laws, and prohibit, by some suitable law, the sale of intoxicating liquors to that will buy for the ordinary purpose of beverage.

PROOF.
Because 1. The daily or general use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is suicidal.
Because 2. He who gains property by selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage to any who will buy, gains it by an unjust traffic.
Because 3. The Legislature has no constitutional right to pass a law licensing any to sell intoxicating liquors to any that will buy—such a law is unconstitutional.
If these propositions be true, the truth of the leading proposition will follow as a legitimate conclusion. That they are true, will appear by the following arguments:
First. The general use of whatever is poisonous, and only poisonous in its essential nature, is suicidal. The general use of intoxicating or alcoholic liquors as a beverage, is poisonous, and only poisonous, in its essential tendency. Therefore, the general use of intoxicating or alcoholic liquors as a beverage is suicidal.
Second. Whoever gains property by violating the rights of others, is engaged in an unjust traffic. He who gains property by trafficking in or selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage, is violating the rights of others. Therefore, he who does this is engaged in an unjust traffic.

Third. The civil legislature has no right to pass any act, the necessary and essential tendency of which is to defend the objects of the constitution or government under which they act—such an act is plainly unconstitutional. An act licensing a man to sell intoxicating liquors to any one that will buy, tends necessarily and essentially to defend the objects of the constitution, under which they act. Therefore the civil legislature has no right to pass an act licensing a man to sell intoxicating liquors to any that will buy—such an act is plainly unconstitutional.

The preceding "proposition" and "proof" have been published by Dr. Smith, President of Randolph Mason College, Va. He offers to discuss them upon strictly logical principles with any gentleman who doubts that they are strictly true, and that every voter should be guided by their authority. There can be but little difficulty in gaining the assent of most minds to their truthfulness. The voters of New York have so decided. They now await with confidence the enactment of a prohibitory law, by the Legislature just elected. If such a law shall be enacted by the Legislature, the people are bound, by the authority of the necessity and righteousness of the law, to see that it is faithfully executed, and so man has a personal right to resist its execution. The laws of the State protect its citizens against robbery, and punish the robber. By the same right, the Maine law should be executed. The law lays its hand upon the implements used for counterfeiting, and upon weapons in the hands of dangerous persons. By the same right it may seize and destroy by burning or drowning the alcoholic liquor kept and sold for the suicidal purposes for which it is used.

Furthermore, when there is a responsibility that requires active operations, there is guilt when that action is not taken. He who stands by and sees a murder committed, without resisting it, is deemed a partaker of the crime. So those citizens that shall remain quiet and unprotesting while the murderous traffic in ardent spirits is carried on in their midst, and men are slain by it, are verily guilty. The murderous list at a late Court in New York city numbered eighteen, and yet in the same city there are now ten thousand licensed and unlicensed murderers, who have not been indicted, and who will for a time go "unwhipped of justice," and unhung. A prohibitory liquor law must be hailed by every peace-loving citizen as the great harbinger of peace, and safeguard against murder. Where there is one man slain by hostile weapons in the hands of the murderer, there are one thousand slain by the licensed traffic in ardent spirits. O, thou great murderer, Rom! thy sentence of death shall be passed upon thee soon, and on the day of thy public execution, a universal shout of victory shall be thy death dirge.

WHAT IS "BABYLON?"

In seeing an extract of a letter in the "Advent Review and Sabbath Herald," I am induced to ask a few questions. I will here give the "extract"—

"Bro. M. L. Dean writes from Ulysses, Potter Co., Pa., Oct. 23d, 1853.—The church here has been greatly encouraged and strengthened, the summer past, by the labors of Bro. Wm. S. Ingraham. Six, at least, have left the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and are now 'looking for that blessed hope,' and the glorious appearing of the Saviour. Others are searching for the truth. The cause has been gradually gaining here, ever since Bro. Edson and Andrews first came with the third angel's message. 'The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad.'"

Now it is well known, that our "Advent" friends teach that "Babylon" means the churches; and that the words, "Come out of her, my people," (Rev. 18: 4) mean that we should come out from the churches of the different denominations. I would inquire, whether this is not a very great error?

That "mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," (Rev. 17: 5) cannot mean the Christian church is any of its forms. I will suggest a few reasons.

First.—The woman had already set upon fire of the different "heads" or forms of government, before there was any Christian church. Rev. 17: 2, 10. —Five are fallen, (when John wrote) one is, and the other is not yet come. These "seven mountains," "seven heads," or "seven kings," are understood to mean the seven different forms of government on which the "woman"—the earthly power of human government—had sat: 1. Kings; 2. Dictators; 3. Tribunes; 4. Democrit; 5. Triumvirate. These were then all "fallen," "one is" (Imperial) when John wrote; this is the sixth; and the seventh, Papal, had not yet come. This "woman," then, being so much older than any Christian church, cannot mean the Church in any of its forms.

Second.—"Babylon" cannot mean the Christian church, because that "in her was found the blood of saints, and of prophets, and of all that were slain upon the earth," (Rev. 18: 24); and this cannot be all found in the Christian church.

Third.—Babylon cannot mean the Christian church, because "the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," (Rev. 17: 18); and the church did not then reign over the kings of the earth. The "great city" is "spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified," (Rev. 11: 8).

Fourth.—Babylon cannot mean the Christian church, because it is the staff of the wicked, "the sceptre of the rulers," Isa. 14: 6. "The hammer of the whole earth," Jer. 50: 23.

"Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," therefore, cannot mean the Christian church in any of its forms; but is the earthly power of human governments. And whether she sit upon many waters, (Rev. 17: 15, Jer. 21: 13); or whether she sit upon a scarlet colored beast, (Rev. 17: 3); or on seven mountains, (Rev. 17: 9); or whether she sit in the temple of God, (3 Thess. 2: 4, Isa. 14: 13); or whether she sit as a queen, (Rev. 18: 8, Isa. 47: 7, 8) yet "her merchants are the great men of the earth," who trade most in the affairs of government, and she will make laws, sometimes, contrary to the laws of the Most High, although "power belongeth unto God."

If our advent friends will answer the above reasons, and show that "Babylon" means the Christian churches, then we are ready to bear the call, "Come out of her, my people."

R. CLARK.

ALBANY, Erie Co., N. Y., Nov. 1853.

BIBLES STAMPED IN FRANCE.—The stringent measures instituted by the priests to limit the sale of good books by hawkers has defeated itself in a curious manner in some of the most benighted districts of France:

"In those parts of France it has hitherto been practically impossible to disseminate Protestant Bibles, because the hawkers, who alone supply the majority of country people with books, knew very well that the sale of them would, under one pretext or another, entail the loss of their license. But now that a government stamp is affixed to every publication before it can be lawfully sold by the hawkers, they have nothing to fear so long as they sell nothing unstamped. The government mark is a conclusive certificate, and it being impossible for the government to stigmatize the Bible as a bad book, Protestant Bibles are now selling freely in priest-ridden Brittany, and many other places where such things were scarcely known."

OUR PALESTINE MISSION.

The Committee on Outfit, appointed to attend to the preparation and departure of the missionaries to Palestine, are in hopes of engaging passage for Bro. Jones and Saunders, with their families, by a vessel to sail from Boston in a few weeks for Jaffa direct. Yet, owing to the lateness of the season, few vessels are up for the ports of the Mediterranean, and some uncertainty exists as to the time, and it may be a week or two longer before the time will arrive when we will give the pasting hand to our beloved representatives to the land of Israel. Should too much delay occur in securing a passage by a sailing vessel, it may be deemed expedient for them to proceed by steam to Liverpool, and thence by merchant vessel to Jaffa or some other port in the vicinity, which the Committee are informed leave Liverpool weekly.

In the mean time, active measures will be required to provide all that will be useful and necessary for the prosecution of the work which our people have undertaken. Many things yet remain to be done, and several weeks will necessarily elapse before the missionaries themselves will be ready. Those having contributions of goods or articles for the mission will inform either member of the Committee, that timely notice may be sent of the time and place of shipment.

A. D. TITMOUTH, Modest, N. J.; Committee.
H. H. BARKER, New York, N. Y.;
T. E. BARKER, New York, N. Y.;

THE NORTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.—We are indebted to the Secretary for a printed copy of the Minutes of the Seventh-day Baptist North-Western Association. A full account of proceedings at the recent meeting in Walworth, Wis., has already appeared in the Recorder, and therefore we only give now the statistics of the churches, which were not included in that account:—

Albion—F. Hall, pastor; D. Stetson, J. Bond, E. C. Bond, elders; L. H. Bond, N. Hanson, deacons; A. D. Bond, clerk. Members, 102.

Albion—A. W. Coon, pastor; J. Wood, deacons; J. Wood, J. A. Foster, S. T. Burdick, L. Coon, P. C. Mink, deacons; J. E. Foster, clerk. Added 43, total 131.

Walworth—O. P. Hall, pastor; A. Hanson, Wm. S. Clarke, deacons; N. L. Hanson, clerk. Added 23, total 27.

Farmington—No returns.
Christiana—E. Campbell, pastor; T. Hanson, deacons; E. Gilbert, E. J. Crandall, E. T. Green, deacons; W. H. H. Coon, clerk. Members, 55.

Berlin—J. M. Todd, pastor; C. Hubbard, C. Clark, deacons; D. E. Lewis, clerk. Members, 62.

Southampton—S. Coon, pastor; A. Baker, deacons; F. Sullivan, clerk. Members, 16.

Dubuque—G. C. Babcock, deacons; C. Thompson, clerk. Members, 21.

REVIVALS.—Several of our exchanges give accounts of interesting revivals in different parts of the country.

The Southern Baptist says that in Savannah, Ga., nearly fifty young converts have been received into the First Baptist Church, and a "very great number" into the Methodist Church.

At Ottawa, Ill., the Congregational Church has enjoyed a precious revival, and nearly all of the churches and denominations in the place are represented as interested in the work.

Rev. Mr. Dudley, of Danville, Va., writes to the Vermont Chronicle, that an extensive and extending work of grace is there enjoyed; that a large number are rejoicing in hope, and others inquiring what they must do to be saved; the Academy shares largely in the work, and the attention of the town is more or less arrested.

The friends of New Hampton Institution will be rejoiced to hear that the first term of the school in its new location at Fairfax, has been blessed with a precious revival of religion. Several have been baptized, and others are indulging hopes. The work is also spreading into the towns and parishes adjoining.

MR. ROBERTS, THE MISSIONARY IN CHINA.—Attention has been directed to this gentleman by the assertion that the leader of the Chinese insurgents recognizes him as having been his teacher in religion. An exchange paper gives a brief sketch of Mr. Roberts and his mission:—

"He first went to China as a missionary on his own account, leaving, as he supposed, property in this country for his support. This property, if we rightly recollect, was in Mississippi, and in the revolutions of the times turned out to be of no real value only. A missionary society, organized for the purpose in Kentucky, had, we believe, the charge of this property in its hands. After the failure of this scheme, Mr. Roberts was received as missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, and continued in this relation until about the time of the formation of the Southern Board, when he became a missionary of that body, and so continued until a year or two ago. He is not a man of culture, and has not been regarded as altogether a practicable man by his associates. Both Boards found it difficult to keep him within the traces. His eccentricities, however, have never detached him from his original friends in Kentucky."

SELLING NEWSPAPERS ON SUNDAY.—Judge Thompson delivered an opinion in the Philadelphia Court of Quarter Sessions, recently, in the matter of "the sale and crying of newspapers on Sunday." The Judge held that the mere carrying about and selling of newspapers on Sunday would not amount to a breach of the peace, but the "crying" of newspapers in the streets on Sunday would constitute such an offence.

JEWS IN NEW YORK.—It is estimated that there are about 30,000 Jews in New York. They own thirteen synagogues, one in Crosby street, one in Green street, two in Henry street, one in Wooster street, one in Norfolk street, one in Clinton street, one in Attorney street, one in Chryslis street, one in White street, one in the upper part of Broadway, besides two or three more places of private meeting.

TAXATION IN OLD TIMES.—To show how things were done sixty years ago in Massachusetts, a correspondent of the Watchman and Register furnishes the following extract from a letter addressed to the late Dr. Rippon of London, dated July 23, 1794:—

"There has been a Baptist church in Medford, twenty miles from Boston, ever since the year 1776, and they have a minister now preaching with them, yet they were all taxed last year towards the support of the Congregational minister of the town. And on the 2d instant, one of the Baptist society there was seized for said tax and carried to Boston, and there imprisoned; but our two Baptist ministers in Boston sent a letter to the assessor of Medford about it, which they received the next Saturday night; and as their proceedings were contrary to law, the Congregational minister of Medford was so much excited that on Lord's day morning, the 6th inst., he sent two of their assessors to Boston, and they released the prisoner, without his paying any costs, and conveyed him home the next day. I was in Boston the week following, and was informed of the uselessness of many in town and country at their violent conduct. This instance may give you some idea of the weakness of what they call the established religion in our government. If Christians in general would unite and renounce this tyranny, it would soon be at an end in America. But as the Man of Sin must die with the consumption, he hath a slow, lingering death. 2 Thess. 2: 3, 8. Perhaps his death will be more violent in Europe than in America."

MINISTERIAL PERQUISITES.—Under this head, a correspondent of the Independent says that while, for fifty or a hundred years past, there has been little or no increase of ministerial salaries, there has been a great falling off in the item of ministerial perquisites. The following statement is introduced in proof:—

In looking over, lately, a manuscript record of the descendants of the celebrated John Eliot, the "Apostle to the Indians," I found the following paragraph, which may serve to throw a little light on the "shady side," as it appeared a century since. In speaking of Rev. Andrew Eliot, D. D., who was installed pastor of the new North Church in Boston, April, 1743, and died Sept. 13, 1778—the writer says: "It was the custom, some eighty or a hundred years ago, to give the minister rings, gloves, &c., at weddings, funerals and baptisms. I have lately come into possession of my grandfather Eliot's almanacs for forty or fifty years, in which he kept an account of such matters; and I find that in twenty-eight years of his ministry he received 2,940 pairs of gloves, of which he sold during twenty-one years to the amount of $1,441 15c. 10d. Old Tenor. During the same years he received 185 gold rings. In eight years he sold of these to the amount of $227 15c. Old Tenor. His presents during his ministry of thirty-six years amounted to over $3,000, Old Tenor."

FREE-WILL BAPTISTS.—The fifteenth General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church commenced at Fairport, N. Y., October 5th, and closed at about 11 o'clock, A. M., on the 18th. The principal topic of discussion was in reference to a Biblical school, which the denomination are determined to establish. The locality, however, is not yet decided upon, but it is in the hands of a committee. By the report on statistics, it appears that the Free-Will Baptists in this country number 55,189 communicants. During the past year there was an increase of over 3,000. There are 1,122 churches and over 1,000 preachers connected with the society. Their opposition to slavery is constant and uncompromising.

JEWS IN SINGAPORE.—A small Jewish congregation exists at Singapore. A correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle writes that a few months since, he visited their synagogue in that ancient city, and distant part of the world. He had the honor of being called to the reading of the Holy Law from a beautiful scroll, the rollers of which were of silver, very beautifully ornamented with filigree work. There was just sufficient to form a Minyan. He breakfasted and passed the Sabbath with the President, who showed him marked attention. They claimed to be descendants of the first Babylonish captivity, and are ignorant of the second dispersion. They embraced him as a brother, and were glad to find, although a European, he could converse with them in the Hebrew language.

THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.—A South Carolina paper—the Charleston Mercury—has the following sensible remarks in relation to the effects of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, sometimes called the "Bill of Abominations":—

"The South has gained nothing but a loss by this law. It was a stupid blunder on the part of Southern statesmen. The value of the slave lost is eaten up if capture follows, while hatred to the institution abroad, and opposition to it at home, are increased by its hard features and the barbarous enforcement of them."

THE MEMORIAL.—The second volume of the Seventh-day Baptist Memorial is completed. Before entering upon the third volume, we ask attention to the following business items:

1. Those who are indebted for the first or second volume or both, are requested, if possible, to pay up before the first day of January.

2. The third volume will be sent to all subscribers for the second volume, who do not notify us to the contrary before the first day of January.

3. All orders for back numbers and volumes have been filled. If any persons have failed to receive the numbers due them, they are requested to notify us immediately.

4. Title pages and tables of contents for the first and second volumes, have been printed, which will be convenient for those desiring to have their numbers bound, and will be furnished without charge to those wishing them.

5. There are on hand a few copies of the first and second volumes, bound separately, in paper, with title pages and tables—price $1 per volume.

6. In a few days we shall have vols. 1 and 2, bound together, in cloth and leather—price $2 50.

General Intelligence.

European News.

By the steamer Washington at New York, and the Canada at Boston, we have one week later news from Europe.

The Turks and Russians have had several skirmishes, in which the former appear to have come off victorious, with heavy losses to the latter. Accounts from Vienna state that the Turks had an engagement with the Russians, in which fourteen superior Russian officers fell, the Turks retaining masters of the field, and the Russians retreating to Bucharest. Four Russian officers arrived at Constantinople as prisoners of war. Accounts from Constantinople state that the Sultan had positively rejected all proposals which the diplomatics have submitted to him. It is supposed that the Czar has formed an alliance with Dost Mahomet, of Persia, to proclaim war against British India, if Great Britain persists in supporting Turkey. Austria remains neutral, but keeps a strict watch over the movements of Serbia. The Serbian Government in the mean time has ordered the population to arm, and has informed the Porte that neither Austria nor Russia will be permitted to occupy Serbia. The Porte has decided that foreign refugees shall not be employed in Europe, but may serve in Asia.

The Paris Monitor states that the French troops in Algeria obtained a victory over the Arabs, on the 25th Oct. The enemy lost 250 dead on the field, the French having captured all their standards, arms and horses, as well as 4,000 sheep and 350 camels. The French lost 3 men killed and 20 wounded.

From China it is announced that Shanghai has been occupied since Sept. 7 by a band of insurgents. At Amoy on the 12th Sept. the rebels completely routed a body of Government troops.

An iron sailing steamer of 100 tons and 30 horse power, intended for the Deep Sea Fishing Association of Scotland, has been launched on the Clyde. The vessel is intended to carry boats with their crews, nets, line, &c., to the fishing grounds, while she admits also of fishing from her decks and of traveling on a new system, besides being ever ready to afford shelter and assistance to the fishermen whenever a gale should spring up.

California News.

By way of New Orleans, we have California news to Nov. 1st, two weeks later.

The total amount of treasure shipped from San Francisco on the 1st November, by both routes, was $2,750,000, mostly for New York.

The mines generally were prosperous. Many new places had been discovered.

Two steamers—the American Eagle and Stockton—had exploded, killing two persons.

The most abstruse questions in California are the proposed removal of the capital, and the election of a United States Senator, to take his seat in 1855.

From the Sandwich Islands the news is ten days later. Another change has been made in the Ministry. Prince Kamehameha having resigned the office of Prime Minister, and John Young being appointed his successor.

The fine building known as the San Francisco Hotel, had been entirely consumed by fire.

A serious riot is reported to have occurred at a place called Martinez, in which three Spaniards were killed.

Trade in San Francisco, and indeed throughout California, is represented as exceedingly dull, owing to the immense stock of goods on hand, and all articles except flour have met with a further decline. Flour, however, is quoted as being fairly held. The crops were turning out fine.

TRANSMIGRATION.—This festival was observed in New York with more than usual strictness. Most of the churches were open for service, and several of the institutions established for the benefit of the poor gave Thanksgiving Dinners. At the dinner of the Ladies' Home Mission Society at the Five Points Mission House, addresses were delivered by Joseph Hoyle, Father Gavazzi, and others, and about $300 was contributed in cash. At the Home for the Friendless there was a Donation Fair, which brought in some $600 in cash, besides gifts of provisions, clothes, and fancy articles for sale.

Speaking of Thanksgiving calls to mind the following paragraph from Rev. Mr. Powers' History of Coos County in New Hampshire, which is copied to show how Thanksgiving were kept in olden time:—

"Early in the settlement of Coos, it so happened that the annual Thanksgiving was passed before the intelligence of it arrived there; but soon after, a Dr. White came up to visit his friends at Newbury, and brought with him a proclamation. This proclamation was read publicly on the Sabbath by Mr. Powers, and by him it was proposed that they should keep a Thanksgiving, notwithstanding the time specified by the Governor was passed, and he proposed the next Thursday. Upon this, a member arose and gravely proposed that it might be deferred longer—for," said he, "there is not a drop of molasses in the town, and we know how important it is to have molasses to keep Thanksgiving. My boys have gone to No. 4, and will be back, probably, by the beginning of next week, and they will bring molasses; and it had better be put off till next week Thursday." It was unanimously agreed to; but the molasses not coming, it was deferred another week; and finally, Thanksgiving was kept without molasses. This, which is enough to provoke a smile, will nevertheless show us the simplicity and destination of those days."

POCKET FULL OF SAINT PETER.—Father Gavazzi is witty as well as eloquent. In a speech in New York, he related the means used by the Catholics to silence and murder him:—

The participants in the Canada riot came into the church, not only against me, but against women, against children, against unwarmed citizens. The riots were not aimed against me only, but against liberty of discussion. Romanism and Jesuitism, if you wish to meet me; if you do not like my doctrine; if you dispute my historical facts; do not answer me with stones and guns, but answer me by fact; answer me reasonably, like men, and not like brutes and savages! Stones are not so soft and logical as syllogisms, my dear brethren! (Laughter and applause.) They are strong arguments, it is true, but not very persuasive! At the door of the church in Montreal, men were stationed with clubs for the use of the rioters, and in addition, the pockets of the missionaries were filled with stones. These are the primary volumes of the Canada schools! The important passage of Matthew, said to allude to Peter, "On this rock will I build my church," has been made rather clear to me since my Canadian tour. I can now really believe, without much difficulty, that the Roman Catholic Church is built upon this rock, after having witnessed Roman Catholics coming into church with their pockets full of Saint Peter! (Great laughter and applause.) Without wrong or ridicule, I might say: "Upon this rock is their church built." Yes, it is a material church, without spiritual elements.

Important Arrest and Recovery of Money.

A few weeks since, a bag, containing $27,810 in bank bills, was mysteriously stolen from the counter of the Bank of the State of New York, just before the hour of closing. The police have since been on the alert to ferret out the expert thief, and at various times it was thought that a clue had been obtained. The arrest of two men, at Toledo, Ohio, with $2,000 of bills corresponding with those stolen, in their possession, created some stir, but it was reserved for our City Police to discover the true rogues, and recover the money. It appears that on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 26, Officer Keefe, of the Chief Office, was in a public house in Broadway, where he met a suspicious character known as Chas. Johnson, for whom he had for some time been looking, and suspecting that he knew something of the robbery, the officer took him aside, and charged him directly with it. Johnson, who no doubt had heard of the arrests at Toledo, thinking the officer was possessed of all the facts, became alarmed, and offered Mr. Keefe $2,000 to allow him to escape. The officer pretended to accept the bribe, and the fellow then told him that he was in possession of all the money, and said that it was in a room in Commerce-st. The two then proceeded in that direction, but the officer, on learning the number of the house, arrested the rogues, and lodged him in the Fifteenth Ward Police Station. He then proceeded to search the room of his prisoner, and found about $23,000 of the stolen money wrapped in an old blanket; Johnson was then removed to the Chief's Office. This same individual was arrested in July last for stealing a box containing $700 from behind the counter of Loring's Hotel, but on trial he was acquitted in consequence of the absence of the principal witness for the prosecution. He is a young man, of rather a sporting appearance, and has lived most of his days in this City. The two men who were arrested in Toledo, are supposed to have been accomplices of Johnson's, and had taken the $2,000 West to circulate. The balance of the stolen money has probably been gambled away by Johnson. The $2,000 reward offered by the Bank for the recovery of the stolen money, will probably be awarded to the officer who made the important arrest.

A Master Ship.

Donald McKay, of Boston, has just completed the largest sailing ship in the world. She is called the Great Republic, is clipper built, and has about 6000 tons of storage capacity. She is 325 feet long, has 53 feet extreme breadth of beam, and 39 feet depth of hold, including four complete decks. The height between her spar and upper decks is 7 feet, and between the others 8 feet; and all her accommodations are in the upper between decks. The crew's quarters are forward, and all she has sail-rooms, store-rooms, accommodations for boys and petty officers, and about three cabins and a vestibule. The after cabin is beautifully wainscoted with mahogany, has recessed sofas on each side, ottomans, marble-covered tables, mirrors, and elliptical panels ornamented with pictures. She has also a fine library for the use of her crew, and spacious accommodations for passengers.

On the spar deck there are five houses for various purposes, but, such is her vast size, they appear to occupy but little space. She has an eagle's head forward for a head, and on the stern, which is semi-elliptical in form, is a large eagle, with the American shield in his talons. She is yellow metal up to twenty-five feet draught, and above it is painted black. Instead of bulwarks, the outline of her spar-deck is protected by a rail or turned wainscots, which, with the houses, are painted white. She is built of oak, is diagonally cross-braced with iron, double caulked, has four depths of midship keelsons, each depth fifteen inches square, three depths of sister keelsons, and four tiller keelsons, two of them riders, and all her frames are cooped, also the keelsons and waterways, and she is square-fastened throughout. She has three tiers of stanchions, which extend from the hold to the third deck, and are keeled in the most substantial style. She also has many long pointers and two beamed bows fore and aft. In a word, she is the strongest ship ever built. Her model is very beautiful, her masts are very long and very sharp, and her lines slightly concave forward and aft. The gripe of her foremast, instead of being regular, is arched, and rises about 18 inches from a straight line. Viewed either end or broadside on, she is the most beautiful vessel we could wish to see. She has four masts, the after one fore-and-aft rigged, and named the spunkier mast; the others are termed as usual, and have Forber's rig. The lower masts, commencing with the fore, are 130, 131, 132, and 100 feet long, and the lower yards 110, 115, and 90 feet square, and the other spars in like proportions. She carries nothing higher than royals forward or aft, and is very snug and strongly rigged. She has on board a steam engine of 15 horse power, designed to do all the heavy work, such as taking in or discharging cargo, setting up rigging, hoisting topsails, pumping ship, &c.

A few years since, Mr. E. C. Swift, of West Topham, owned the stage from Montpelier to Bradford. He found himself in serious pecuniary embarrassment, and started for California. After trying his luck in the mines with indifferent success, he finally took up his old business of staging. A short time since he returned with a pile amounting to some $20,000, called all his creditors together at Wain's River House in Topham, paid them off, principal and interest, and threw in a good dinner.

For whipping his daughter, aged 19 years, on Sunday, Oliver Shaw, of Palmer, (Mass.) has been sent to the house of correction for ninety days.

SUMMARY.

Officer James L. Moseley, of the Crystal Palace Police, the other day arrested a man named C. E. Weidemeyer, who has occupied the position of one of the Directors in the German Department, and on searching his residence, No. 378 Fourth-st., a large stock of goods were found, which had been purchased from the French, German, and other departments, from time to time. The goods stolen were multifarious in their character, and embraced jewelry, shawls, silks, cloths, china, plate, &c. Among other stolen property found at the rogue's house was a superb Sevres vase, the property at Napoleon III., and a beautiful breakfast service spotted at the Exhibition by the Czar of all the Russias.

The completion of the interior of the main building of the Smithsonian Institution is now actively progressing. The original plan having been changed by the Regents, all the wood work and framing has been removed, and its place is being supplied by fire proof materials. The first story is to be fitted up for the Library and Museum of Natural History, and the second story as a Lecture Room, capable of accommodating 2,000 persons. These arrangements it is thought will be completed within six months at the farthest, when the western wing of the building, at present occupied by the Library, will be converted into a Gallery of Art.

From the Directory of Chicago for 1853, we collate a few facts of general interest. The number of names upon the list is nearly 13,000, which is considered to represent a population of 55,000. The volume informs us that we have 120 physicians, and 170 lawyers. There are 42 church edifices, and 23 schools, within the city limits. Our Fire Department consists of 13 companies, numbering 600 efficient members. There are published in the city 24 periodicals, of which 7 are dailies, and 16 weeklies, 1 of each in German, and 4 monthlies.

Col. Thorne, of Washington Hollow, Dutchess County, N. Y., lately imported a valuable Arabian stallion, and other stock, by the steamer Herman, which were shipped, without regard to cost, of the best to be found in England. The stallion is stated to have cost five thousand dollars. By the Washington, on her last trip, he received a cow, of the same strain as the bull, for which, we are told, he paid $2,000, besides the expense of her passage. This is probably the highest price ever paid for a cow. She was accompanied by a two months old calf, which cost $750. Also, a lot of South Down sheep, of superior quality.

Speaking of the inducements to build a railroad to the Pacific, an exchange says that it would make the United States at once master of the Commerce of Asia. From England to China is 9,658 miles and 180 days by the overland route; 18,500 miles and 170 days' sail by the Cape of Good Hope; 17,000 miles and 130 days' sail or 63 days' steam by the Isthmus of Panama; while a route across this continent would bring Liverpool within 37 days of Shanghai, and reduce the cost of transportation more than one-half.

John Walker, a brewer at Cincinnati, recently deceased, left an estate of $200,000. By will he devised to his wife in cash $10,000, and her dower of one-third in real estate, for her natural life. She claims, as they were children, she being a second wife, that she, as next of kin, is entitled to the whole of the personal estate, beside her dower in the realty. The nineteen heirs of Walker claim that if Mrs. Walker elects to not take by the will, she relinquishes the $10,000 legacy, and all the personal property, and can only take her dower in the realty. The case is in the court.

A new discovery has been made relative to deaf persons. Two artists in London have invented an instrument which is placed with in the ears without projecting, and being of the same color as the skin, is not perceptible. It enables deaf persons to enjoy general conversation, to hear distinctly at church and public assemblies; the unpleasant sensation of ringing noises in the ear is entirely removed, and it affords all the assistance that can be desired.

The N. Y. Tribune of Nov. 18th says:—Gerrit Smith is in this city at present, under medical treatment. His disease is the one popularly called rush of blood to the head, which is thought by physicians to be a cerebral operation to which he submitted several months ago. His physicians are now informed, cherish the hope that he will be relieved in season to take his seat at the opening of Congress.

The Ohio State Journal says: The Capitol of the State of Tennessee, now near completion, is said to be one of the finest buildings in the world. Its cost is a million of dollars. It is built of solid limestone taken from near the hill on which it stands. The roof is of Tennessee copper, and the speaker's stand of marble quarried in that State.

While the City Marshal of Bangor, Me., was engaged in destroying a quantity of liquor that had been seized, some one in the crowd inquired, "Why was not this sold for three hundred pounds and given to the poor?" A voice in the distance replied, "The poor have enough of it; let it go!"

A free negro, 70 years old, named Dr. Perkins, has been convicted in the Circuit Court of Bracken County, Ky., and sent to the Penitentiary for three years, for aiding the escape of a slave. Two other negroes and two white men have been indicted for the same offense.

Since the 1st of November, two vessels have been despatched for Liberia by the American Colonization Society, conveying, jointly, nearly three hundred and fifty emigrants to become citizens of the young Republic of Western Africa.

Anna Burrows, a young girl in Philadelphia, has recovered a verdict of $2,995 damages against Messrs. French & Richards, for injuries received by her, in falling through a defective grating into the vault of the defendant at the corner of Market and Tenth-sts. in that city.

Messages are now sent to and received from Halifax, in the space of five minutes, via the House Printing Telegraph line. The distance by telegraph between Halifax and New York is about one thousand miles.

For whipping his daughter, aged 19 years, on Sunday, Oliver Shaw, of Palmer, (Mass.) has been sent to the house of correction for ninety days.

The Dodge Co. Iron Company, just organized, with a capital of half a million of dollars, in Dodge County, Wisconsin, are about going largely into the manufacture of railroad iron, so that Wisconsin will no longer need to go abroad for her rails. They have contracted for the erection of twenty blast furnaces, and one large rolling mill, to be devoted exclusively to railroad iron. The Beloit Journal states that they have already contracted to furnish to the Milwaukee and La Crosse Railroad fifty tons of iron per day on and after the 1st of March next, until the track is laid to Portage City.

The New Bedford Mercury publishes an extract of a letter from the commander of the U. S. ship Powhatan, at Port Louis, Mauritius, in which it is stated that the pirates who plundered the officers and crew of the American schooner Queen of the West, of Dartmouth, Mass., were in confinement at the Island of Bourbon, having been taken from New Boy in a French vessel of war, tried and condemned to hard labor for life in chains. They were wandering Arabs, the subjects of no established government.

The emigration to Nebraska is stated by the St. Louis Democrat to be surprisingly great, and from day to day trains of wagons may be seen advancing upon the territory, not only from Missouri, but from Kentucky, Illinois, and other Western States. The civilized Indians resident in Nebraska cultivate their farms, are educated, and speak good English, and are desirous of becoming citizens of the United States.

Some time ago a man was assaulted in Berwick, Maine, and was removed over the line to his residence in New Hampshire, where he died. Judge Howard, of Maine, has charged the Grand Jury of York County that the murderer cannot be indicted, at common or statute law, where the deadly wound was inflicted in one State and the man died in another—so the murderer will escape all punishment.

Mr. Kennedy, the clergyman, belonging to the Reformed Presbyterian Church, who was arraigned for reading the Psalm or Hymn in use in the church in which he officiated, by invitation, during the sessions of the Synod of the former body, has been suspended from the ministry for the offense. Since his suspension he has been received into the Presbytery of Ohio, and is now in full standing in the Presbyterian Church, O. S.

Two colored men, brothers, recently made application to one of the courts of Richmond, Va., asserting that they had become so far removed from their original blood as to entitle them to the benefit of an act of Assembly, which declares that persons with less than one-fourth negro blood shall be considered white persons; and under this plea they claimed the privilege of going abroad without registers. The Court, after hearing arguments on both sides, refused the application.

Madame Sentag, whose German reputation as a singer is not inferior to that of Jenny Lind, gave a free concert in the Sunday-schools of Richmond, Va., recently. There was a general gathering of the teachers and pupils, filling the large church to its utmost capacity, and all seemed to be highly delighted with the performance. Among the songs was the familiar one of "Home, Sweet Home."

The first American Magnetic Telegraph Line was established in 1844, between Washington City and Baltimore. The aggregate number of train and branch lines in the United States at the present time is about one hundred. There are completed and in operation 77,000 miles, and 10,000 more are in progress of construction.

Messrs. Benson and other parties concerned in the importation of Guano from the Lobos Islands in 1852, have applied to the State Department for an indemnity for the losses incurred through the failure of this Government to support them in taking the article from the islands without paying tribute to Peru. The amount of the claim is stated at a million of dollars.

A dispatch dated Boston, Tuesday, Nov. 23, 1853, says: Last evening the train from Boston for New York via Fall River, stopped at Scitagon to repair damage to a wheel, when the special train for Bridgewater ran into it. The engine penetrated half way through the rear car, seriously scalding and injuring five passengers.

A dispatch dated Detroit, Saturday, Nov. 26, 1853, says: The propeller Independence, Capt. John McKay, left her dock at the head of Portage River on the evening of the 21st inst., with a heavy freight of winter supplies for Ontonagon and Lapointe, and a large number of passengers. When about a mile out her boiler burst, tearing the boat to atoms, and killing four persons.

A dispatch dated Philadelphia, Saturday, Nov. 27, 1853, says: Yesterday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, the tow-boat Tom. Rowan ran into and capsized a small boat containing a number of persons going out to the emigrant ship Ticonderoga, just arrived, opposite Race-st. Some six or eight of those who were in the boat are supposed to have been drowned.

Fourteen suits have been commenced against the Farmers' Deposit Bank, of Pittsburgh, Penn., for alleged violations of the small note law. The Clerk and Directors are accused of paying out notes under the denomination of five dollars, at the counter. The penalty for infringement of the law, in the case of banks, is very heavy, being $300 for every note so issued.

The packet-ship Constellation left Liverpool on the 21st of October with 922 passengers, and arrived at New York on the 25th of November with 922 passengers, having lost 100 in a voyage of 35 days. The packet-ship Hibernal arrived at New York on the same day with 380 passengers, having lost 33 on the voyage.

At the late term of the Court of Common Pleas in Hillsdale County, a man was tried for hitting off another's nose, last Thanksgiving Day. The Jury decided that he should pay for the delicious morsel of meat thus forcibly obtained, the sum of $70 42. This may, therefore, be considered as the legal value of a man's nose.

The Circuit Court in Broome County has awarded $4000 damages to Mrs. Frances Johnson, whose husband was killed by an accident on the Erie Railroad.

At one of the missionary stations, the question, "What is original sin?" having been put to an aged Indian chief, he promptly replied, "Laziness!"

The London Times, Oct. 4th, states that the competition between the North-western and the Great Western Railway Companies has risen to such a pitch that in one case, where the lines of the two great companies run beside the same towns, the traveler may ride a distance of sixty miles for sixpence. In another case, the fare for riding sixty miles is 1s. 6d.

The Christian Witness says that Mr. G. W. Beck, of Somerville, Mass., has publicly renounced Romanism, and conveyed to the P. E. Church the establishment long known as the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, Prospect Hill, Somerville, valued at a sum between $5,000 and $6,000.

On the morning of Nov. 24th, the steamer Bay State was on her way from Fall River to New York, during a fog, the canoe in contact with the steamer Sylph, which was so injured that she sank immediately, taking down with her two of the crew.

Mrs. Minerva Bradshaw recovered, in the Marion Circuit Court, a judgment for $4,000 against the Peru and Indianapolis Railroad, as damages for the death of her husband, an employee, killed from injuries received on a train while in the service of the Company.

The Wisconsin Methodist Conference have resolved to request the next General Conference to specify an early day when slaveholders in the Methodist Episcopal Church shall either free their slaves or leave the church.

In Chicago, there are 17,063 children—an increase of nearly 5,000 in two years. The total population of Cleveland is 31,214, of whom 8,435 are young Americans, between the ages of 5 and 21.

There are twenty-four Catholic churches in the city of New York and its vicinity, and nine convents. At sixteen of these churches the English language is preached, five the German, and one the French language.

An invoice of splendid Turkish goods has just been received for the Crystal Palace Exhibition of 1854, valued at $150,000. These goods will be opened and occupy the space of goods reserved.

The steamer Robert Martin, running between Charleston and New York, S. C., burnt her boiler last week, killing ten persons, and wounding several others.

At a late term of the County Court in Perry County, Ia., there were twenty-two applications for divorce, seventeen of which were granted.

Eleven negro slaves ran away from Marion Co., Missouri, recently, and were conveyed beyond the reach of their pursuers, by means of the underground railroad.

Henry C. Bowen, of the firm of Bowen & McNewen, has just ordered six hundred dollars' worth of evergreens to be set out in the streets of South Woodstock, his native village.

On Thanksgiving Day, a young lady crossing Broadway, N. Y., was run over by an Express wagon, and so injured that she died soon after.

John H. R. Remington, known as the inventor of the "Remington Bridge," died in Texas recently of yellow fever.

Twenty-eight thousand five hundred and six emigrants arrived at New York between Oct. 21 and Nov. 17, 1853.

Two Irishmen were arrested last week in Louisville, who are suspected of running off negroes.

There are fifty-seven divorce cases before the Court of Common Pleas at Cincinnati.

New York Market—November 25, 1853.

Wheat—No. 1, 55 1/2 to 56 1/2 for common to straight No. 2, 57 1/2 to 58 1/2 for No. 3, 59 1/2 to 60 1/2 for No. 4, 61 1/2 to 62 1/2 for No. 5, 63 1/2 to 64 1/2 for No. 6, 65 1/2 to 66 1/2 for No. 7, 67 1/2 to 68 1/2 for No. 8, 69 1/2 to 70 1/2 for No. 9, 71 1/2 to 72 1/2 for No. 10, 73 1/2 to 74 1/2 for No. 11, 75 1/2 to 76 1/2 for No. 12, 77 1/2 to 78 1/2 for No. 13, 79 1/2 to 80 1/2 for No. 14, 81 1/2 to 82 1/2 for No. 15, 83 1/2 to 84 1/2 for No. 16, 85 1/2 to 86 1/2 for No. 17, 87 1/2 to 88 1/2 for No. 18, 89 1/2 to 90 1/2 for No. 19, 91 1/2 to 92 1/2 for No. 20, 93 1/2 to 94 1/2 for No. 21, 95 1/2 to 96 1/2 for No. 22, 97 1/2 to 98 1/2 for No. 23, 99 1/2 to 100 1/2 for No. 24, 101 1/2 to 102 1/2 for No. 25, 103 1/2 to 104 1/2 for No. 26, 105 1/2 to 106 1/2 for No. 27, 107 1/2 to 108 1/2 for No. 28, 109 1/2 to 110 1/2 for No. 29, 111 1/2 to 112 1/2 for No. 30, 113 1/2 to 114 1/2 for No. 31, 115 1/2 to 116 1/2 for No. 32, 117 1/2 to 118 1/2 for No. 33, 119 1/2 to 120 1/2 for No. 34, 121 1/2 to 122 1/2 for No. 35, 123 1/2 to 124 1/2 for No. 36, 125 1/2 to 126 1/2 for No. 37, 127 1/2 to 128 1/2 for No. 38, 129 1/2 to 130 1/2 for No. 39, 131 1/2 to 132 1/2 for No. 40, 133 1/2 to 134 1/2 for No. 41, 135 1/2 to 136 1/2 for No. 42, 137 1/2 to 138 1/2 for No. 43, 139 1/2 to 140 1/2 for No. 44, 141 1/2 to 142 1/2 for No. 45, 143 1/2 to 144 1/2 for No. 46, 145 1/2 to 146 1/2 for No. 47, 147 1/2 to 148 1/2 for No. 48, 149 1/2 to 150 1/2 for No. 49, 151 1/2 to 152 1/2 for No. 50, 153 1/2 to 154 1/2 for No. 51, 155 1/2 to 156 1/2 for No. 52, 157 1/2 to 158 1/2 for No. 53, 159 1/2 to 160 1/2 for No. 54, 161 1/2 to 162 1/2 for No. 55, 163 1/2 to 164 1/2 for No. 56, 165 1/2 to 166 1/2 for No. 57, 167 1/2 to 168 1/2 for No. 58, 169 1/2 to 170 1/2 for No. 59, 171 1/2 to 172 1/2 for No. 60, 173 1/2 to 174 1/2 for No. 61, 175 1/2 to 176 1/2 for No. 62, 177 1/2 to 178 1/2 for No. 63, 179 1/2 to 180 1/2 for No. 64, 181 1/2 to 182 1/2 for No. 65, 183 1/2 to 184 1/2 for No. 66, 185 1/2 to 186 1/2 for No. 67, 187 1/2 to 188 1/2 for No. 68, 189 1/2 to 190 1/2 for No. 69, 191 1/2 to 192 1/2 for No. 70, 193 1/2 to 194 1/2 for No. 71, 195 1/2 to 196 1/2 for No. 72, 197 1/2 to 198 1/2 for No. 73, 199 1/2 to 200 1/2 for No. 74, 201 1/2 to 202 1/2 for No. 75, 203 1/2 to 204 1/2 for No. 76, 205 1/2 to 206 1/2 for No. 77, 207 1/2 to 208 1/2 for No. 78, 209 1/2 to 210 1/2 for No. 79, 211 1/2 to 212 1/2 for No. 80, 213 1/2 to 214 1/2 for No. 81, 215 1/2 to 216 1/2 for No. 82, 217 1/2 to 218 1/2 for No. 83, 219 1/2 to 220 1/2 for No. 84, 221 1/2 to 222 1/2 for No. 85, 223 1/2 to 224 1/2 for No. 86, 225 1/2 to 226 1/2 for No. 87, 227 1/2 to 228 1/2 for No. 88, 229 1/2 to 230 1/2 for No. 89, 231 1/2 to 232 1/2 for No. 90, 233 1/2 to 234 1/2 for No. 91, 235 1/2 to 236 1/2 for No. 92, 237 1/2 to 238 1/2 for No. 93, 239 1/2 to 240 1/2 for No. 94, 241 1/2 to 242 1/2 for No. 95, 243 1/2 to 244 1/2 for No. 96, 245 1/2 to 246 1/2 for No. 97, 247 1/2 to 248 1/2 for No. 98, 249 1/2 to 250 1/2 for No. 99, 251 1/2 to 252 1/2 for No. 100, 253 1/2 to 254 1/2 for No. 101, 255 1/2 to 256 1/2 for No. 102, 257 1/2 to 258 1/2 for No. 103, 259 1/2 to 260 1/2 for No. 104, 261 1/2 to 262 1/2 for No. 105, 263 1/2 to 264 1/2 for No. 106, 265 1/2 to 266 1/2 for No. 107, 267 1/2 to 268 1/2 for No. 108, 269 1/2 to 270 1/2 for No. 109, 271 1/2 to 272 1/2 for No. 110, 273 1/2 to 274 1/2 for No. 111, 275 1/2 to 276 1/2 for No. 112, 277 1/2 to 278 1/2 for No. 113, 279 1/2 to 280 1/2 for No. 114, 281 1/2 to 282 1/2 for No. 115, 283 1/2 to 284 1/2 for No. 116, 285 1/2 to 286 1/2 for No. 117, 287 1/2 to 288 1/2 for No. 118, 289 1/2 to 290 1/2 for No. 119, 291 1/2 to 292 1/2 for No. 120, 293 1/2 to 294 1/2 for No. 121, 295 1/2 to 296 1/2 for No. 122, 297 1/2 to 298 1/2 for No. 123, 299 1/2 to 300 1/2 for No. 124, 301 1/2 to 302 1/2 for No. 125, 303 1/2 to 304 1/2 for No. 126, 305 1/2 to 306 1/2 for No. 127, 307 1/2 to 308 1/2

Miscellaneous.

I Owe no Man a Dollar.

Oh, do not say, my own dear wife,
The wealth of this world is my neighbor.
But bid me sit, or to stand, or to kneel,
And cheerfully give my labor.
You must know, the last of those little debts
That have been on my lingering sorrow
Is paid this night: So we'll both go forth
And cheerfully give the world to-morrow.
Oh, the creditor is but a shadowy foe,
With the debtor's name on his coat;
While I'm a wife, and you are a queen,
For we owe no man a dollar!

Our neighbor, you are in his coach today,
With his wife, and his flourishing daughter,
While we sit down at our common board,
To a crust and a cup of water.
I saw that your food is in your eye,
Though you say your best to conceal it;
I know that the contrast reached your heart,
And you could not help but feel it:
But knowing that our money here
Blasphemes my name and the world's,
You'll join my prayer, and help me shout
That I owe no man a dollar!

This neighbor, whose show has dazzled your eyes,
In fact is a wretched devil;
I pity him, and my very heart,
And I wish that he were better;
Why, the man is the vilest slave alive!
For his darling wife and daughter
Will live in style, though rain should come—
So he goes for a lamb to the slaughter:
But his wife, the lighter every day—
That terrible debtor's collar!
Oh, what would give could be any with us,
That he would no man a dollar!

You seem vexed—let me tell you more:
Within two hours I met him,
Smoking away in a lighted pipe,
As if a devil had sweet him.
Yet he had been a very worthy man,
When I met him with the greatest pleasure—
When I met him by name, and forced to stop,
Though he said he was not at home.
He told me how well he had done,
Till he found my sack from the collar:
Then I took his hand as I proudly said—
"Now I owe no man a dollar!"

Ah! now you see, for you feel the force
Of the truth I have been repeating;
I know that a flower might blossom here,
In that garden of woe and despair:
To-morrow I'll rise with a giant's strength,
To follow my daily labor,
But we are already too heavily laden
For our wretched and dark neighbor;
And we'll pray for the time when all shall be free
From the weight of the debtor's collar—
When the power will lift his voice and cry,
"Now I owe no man a dollar!"

Sunday Sports in France.

A letter to the N. Y. Tribune, dated Tuesday, Nov. 1, gives the following account of doings on the previous Sunday:—

The most brilliant assemblage of the season took place last Sunday at the favorite resort near Ville d'Avray. The Emperor, Empress and suite, the Grand Dukes of Baden and Saxe, a majority of the chiefs and subordinates of the French army, the nobility and gentry, the members of the jockey club, and a large number of English gentlemen, who had come over expressly for the occasion, crowded the field of sport. Not less than two thousand carriages were on the ground, a large proportion of which were what are called here "American," while there were a considerable number of the heavy, but stylish, English coaches-and-fours, used as family traveling wagons. The price of admission to the field being placed so high, and the distance from Paris so great, the assemblage was what the Club desired it to be—entirely select, so far as regards personal appearance, at least. So exclusive an assemblage of brilliant figures and elegant toilettes of both sexes would be difficult to meet in any country. It was gratifying to see but few American ladies on the ground; the gentlemen, however, turned out very strong. The most noted actresses, dancers, singers, and other celebrities of Paris, were present, exciting envy and surprise by the magnificence of their toilettes.

The Emperor and Empress came on the field in a superb carriage, drawn by four horses, with four similar carriages following, containing their suite, but without military escort. They stepped out of their carriage into the crowd, and passing through a narrow opening that was made for them spontaneously by the people, without the aid of policemen, they passed to the imperial stand, in front of which six soldiers were drawn up to present arms, while another gave the imperial rap, tap, tap, on the drum. As the Emperor passed along, recognizing here and there an acquaintance, the people took off their hats as they do on meeting a friend; but there was no cheering; the bourgeois never shout "Vive l'Empereur!"—they leave that to hired chiffonniers. The Emperor has again that sallow, bloated appearance, which he wore more than a year ago, and from which he had partly recovered; he begins to stoop, and when he walks bears heavily on his stick, as if he required its support to sustain himself. Schemers against the life of Louis Napoleon have no need to jeopardize their lives in attempts upon his; for nature will have accomplished its work upon his body before many years roll around. It is exceedingly rare to see a man with his peculiar appearance of the skin, and with such manifest indications of imperfect secretion, both on life as tenaciously as he does. It is still more rare to see a man recover from this condition.

After the imperial party had gained the stand prepared for them, the horses were called for a start. In the circle which was to be run, there were 17 obstacles to be leaped: stone-hedges, hurdles, dry ditches, and a river 16 feet wide, 5 feet deep, dug square down, and hid at its edge by shrubbery, so that the horses could not see it until they arrived at the point to make the leap. The course lay around an ordinary farm, slightly undulating, with meadow, forest-land, marsh, and thickets of bushes and trees, very happily interspersed, so as to make the chase approximate as near as possible a variable fox or deer-chase. Flag-sticks erected at the different objects to be leaped, indicated the track to be pursued.

The horses were all English, but owned in France. Their owners, titled gentlemen, were to ride each his own horse. The first race was to be twice around the track, two miles and a half; eight horses started. At the river they all jumped nearly together, and all escaped without accident except the Count Talon's fine horse, Hodge Dow, who fell and broke a hind leg, near the middle joint. He was afterward shot. The rider escaped with only a slight injury. At a garden fence, another horse fell and was "done for"; two others bolted at the hurdles, and only four came in on the "home stretch."

For the second race seven horses started, and three came in running; two had fallen, and the others bolted. On the third race, four horses started; when the signal was given, one horse bolted up the hill, and was no more seen; another fell, and two came in on the home stretch at a sweeping rate, leaping the obstacles as if there had been nothing in the way.

Three races produce the greatest excitement imaginable; for, besides the usual interest taken in a horse-race, there is added to it the expectation, in fact, the actual certainty, that a serious accident of some kind will happen. And what gives still further interest, is the fact that the riders are generally the owners, and are not only titled persons, but men of respectability, of family, and of wealth, and engage in the chase more for excitement than for money. Viewed from the stands, these races are extremely picturesque; it is rare to see the same horse keep the lead for any considerable distance, on account of the nature of the ground, and the more or less derangements which take place at the obstacles. At each obstacle there is a crowd gathered, where each chooses his favorite horse. Sometimes the horses are lost for a moment in a cluster of trees, and then again they are seen scampering across a level stretch of meadow, with tremendous strides, till they reach a fence, where perhaps some fall and others bolt, while the better-trained horses, leaping with ease and precision all the obstacles placed in their way, arrive at last at the piece of level ground where the trial of speed takes place, and which terminates at the judges' stand. Here the poor beast receives the lash, and the money excitement runs up to zero. I have seen more than one Frenchman, man of respectability, of dignity, and great property, under other circumstances, rush on to the track, and, indifferent to the jeers and convulsive laughter of the less interested spectators, jump up into the air every time his favorite horse had to leap an obstacle, let him down again easy and safely, (in his motions,) laugh, swear, exclaim, see-saw the air with his arms, and, finally, when his favorite came sweeping past him in the lead, go into an ecstasy of abandoned delirium that is refreshing to look at.

The Way to Get an Office.

The following has come to us through a source that entitles it to entire credit:—

A huge two-fisted, broad-shouldered son of North Carolina, appeared a few days ago, in the treasury building, and inquired for the Secretary. He was directed to the proper door, but when about to enter the ante-room, was stopped by the messenger, for not observing the usual ceremonial.

"What's the matter now?" asked Rip Van Winkle.

"You can't go in, Sir," replied the messenger.

"We'll see about that," replied Rip, as he gathered the messenger in his brawny arms, and set him aside. Arrived at Mr. Guthrie's room, and finding several gentlemen present, he asked:—

"Which is the Secretary?"

"I am," said Mr. Guthrie to the intruder, rather sternly. "How did you get in here?"

"Oh! we'll talk about that after awhile," said Rip. "I've come on business, and we'll stand to that first. You see, Mr. Secretary, there's a light boat at —, and a Whig has it now, and I want it. Mind now! It won't make any difference in my voting if you don't give it to me. I always vote right, anyhow. Here's my papers; look at 'em, and speak out."

Mr. Guthrie was quite taken with his honest simplicity, and replied that he would answer him at twelve.

"Mind now," said Rip, showing his watch to the Secretary; "you see that little finger? Well, when it gets to 12 I'll be here certain. No mistake now!"

"Where are you stopping?" inquired the Secretary.

"Sleeping! You will say that. I've got no money to find away stopping anywhere. I got my breakfast at the market-house this morning. And you see I want to start home in the mill boat this evening, for if I stay here long, I can't get home at all. Now mind, Mr. Secretary, 12 o'clock, you know!"

During his absence Mr. Guthrie examined his papers, and finding him properly recommended, directed his commission to be prepared accordingly. Prompt to the minute, our friend appeared, and was handed his commission. He warmly thanked the Secretary, and took his leave, and now is doubtless at home attending to his duties. We dare say that Uncle Sam has not a better officer.

The Wine-Crop of the West.

We have deferred, for some time, an article upon the grape interests of our State and the West generally. We wish we could do the subject greater justice than the limits of an editorial column give us opportunity; for the grape culture, the grape and wine interests of our community are fraught with very considerable importance now, and must, eventually, become a great and absorbing feature of the State's property. Fields of waving corn, or golden tasseled wheat, are fair to the view, but picture to yourself the vast vineyards that shall anon deck the hill and dale with gorgeous and tempting voluptuously, rich, red, ripe, luscious, or Catawba.

The third year after planting the slips, the production of wine may be commenced from the fruit. There is more expense and labor in commencing the cultivation of the vines, than is probably attendant upon the planting of the usual crops, but less afterward. From one acre, well planted with healthy vines, probably from $500 to $1,000 worth of wine may be produced in good seasons. This wine has generally brought $1 per gallon here, but this year will probably bring 25 cents more.

In Missouri, near Hermann, there are 500 acres; in Indiana, 300 or 350; in Illinois about 100, and in Kentucky the same—making about 2,500 acres in all. It is estimated that Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky will this year produce at least half a million gallons of wine. The yield on some of the vineyards will be equal to 7,000 or 8,000 gallons—stating 2,400 vines to the acre, planted about three feet apart, in rows separated by a distance of three feet. Mr. Robert Buchanan, who is among the most successful cultivators of the vine, this year obtained about 800 gallons of wine from each acre of his vineyard, which will net him about $700 per acre. Some other vineyards will do equally well. Persons, however, are not advised to embark in grape-growing with the expectation of profit; it shall be necessary to hire labor. The German vine-dressers muster all capable members of their family into the service—the wife often being the most efficient. In this manner they realize an adequate income.

It has been customary to give a piece of land, of any fifteen to twenty acres, with a house on it, to these Germans, on the condition that the tenant shall plant a certain quantity of grapes each year, in a proper manner, and pay the proprietor one half the proceeds of the vineyard.

The fruit is purchased from the vineyard men for from $5 to $6 per 100 pounds, (or two bushels) a yielded from $1 to 4 gallons of wine. It is then mashed by the manufacturer in the city, and pressed. The juice is then fermented in the cellars, and the sparkling Catawba is in prime order for market at the end of fifteen or twenty months.

A few days ago we visited the vineyards of Mr. Longworth, and the following facts were derived: There are three vintages, one of which will turn out 50,000 bottles yearly, and another 100,000 bottles yearly, of dry wine. Some portion of the cellars is occupied by immense butts, or cylindrical casks, one of which holds 5,000 gallons, or $5,000 worth of wine, if bottled. The stores are about three inches in thickness, and the heads curve inward, so as to introduce the arch, to resist the internal pressure. Other objects, quite as noticeable, are the long rows of black bottles placed in a horizontal position, and stacked up like cord-wood, in solid piles as high as one's neck. In the cellars of the extensive native wine establishment of Longworth and Zimmerman are twenty-four casks holding about 2,500 gallons each, or 60,000 gallons altogether, of the vintage of 1850, '51, '52; and it is expected to store 25,000 gallons of this year's wine.

Mr. Longworth will this year have on hand and for sale about 200,000 bottles sparkling Catawba; Messrs. Longworth and Zimmerman, some 60,000 bottles dry Catawba, exclusive of a quantity of wine sufficient for 190,000 bottles; Messrs. Bogen, Corneo & Son, Work, and others, from 90,000 to 100,000 bottles sparkling Catawba.

Extraordinary Operation on the Substantiation Vein, by the Knife of a Vein.

The following narrative is given with three objects: Firstly, to show the value of self-control and common sense, in scenes of danger; secondly, the resources of nature under the most desperate circumstances; and, thirdly, to correct the boastful surgeon, when he feels inclined to convince the world that all that is excellent and skillful centers in himself. The most chance in the world elicited the simple and child-like narrative from the operator, and he seemed as much astonished as himself, when the almost certain character of his performance was pointed out to him on a preparation of the heart and blood-vessel.

Edward T. Hinckley, of Wareham, Mass., then mate of the bark Andrews, commanded by James L. Nye, of Sandwich, Mass., sailed some two years and a half since (we find the date omitted in our minutes) from New Bedford, Mass., on a whaling voyage. When off the Gallapagos Islands, one of the hands, who had shown a mutinous disposition, attacked Captain Nye with some violence, in consequence of a reproach given him for disobedience. In the scuffle which ensued, a wound was inflicted with a knife commencing at the angle of the jaw, and dividing the skin and superficial tissues of the left side of the neck, down to the middle of the clavicle, under which the point of the knife went. It was done in broad day, in presence of the greater part of the crew; and Mr. Hinckley, the mate, being so near, that he was at that moment resting to the captain's assistance. Instantly seizing the villain, and handing him over to the crew, the knife either fell or was drawn by some one present, and a frightful gush of dark blood welled up from the wound, as the captain fell upon the deck. Mr. Hinckley immediately thrust his fingers into the wound, and endeavored to catch the bleeding vessel; with them against the clavicle, as a point of action, and gripping, as he expressed it to me, "all between," he found the bleeding nearly ceased. The whole affair was so sudden, that Mr. Hinckley stated to me, he was completely at a loss what step to take. Such had been the violence of the hemorrhage, a space on the deck fully as large as a barrel head, being covered with blood in a few seconds, that it was evident from that and the consequent faintness, that the captain would instantly die, should he remove his fingers from the bleeding vessel. As Mr. H. said to me, with the simplicity and straightforward style of seamen, "I brought to" for a minute, to think over the matter. The bleeding coming upwards from under the collar-bone, and being completely concealed by it, it was plain enough that I couldn't get at the blood-vessel, without sawing the bone in two; and this I would not like to have tried, even if I had dared to remove my fingers. Feeling that my fingers' ends were so deep as to be below the bone, and yet the bleeding having stopped, I passed them a little further downwards; still keeping up the pressure against the bone with the middle joints. I then found my fingers passed under something running in the same course with the bone; and I slowly endeavored to draw up out of the wound, so as to see if it was not the blood-vessel. Finding it moved a little, I slowly pulled it up with one finger; when I was pulling it up, the captain groaned terribly, but I went on, because I knew I could do nothing else. As soon as I could see it, I washed away the blood, and was astonished and very glad to see there were two vessels, as I supposed them to be, one behind the other; the cut was in the front one. It was the full breadth of the knife, or about half an inch, and neither across nor lengthways, but about between the two, and went about half its thickness through the blood-vessel; it was smooth and blue in appearance, and the cut had stopped bleeding, as I supposed at the time, because the vessel was pressed together by being stretched across my finger. As I had often sewed up cuts in the flesh, and knew nothing about tying blood vessels, and supposed that was only done when they were cut in two, as in amputated limbs, I concluded to try my hand at sewing it up; so I took five little stitches; they were very near together, for the wound was certainly not half an inch wide, if so much." On inquiry of Mr. Hinckley, if he cut off the thread each time and threaded the needle again, he said Yes; but "I only cut off one end, and left the other hanging out." This he had learned from a little book, prepared for the use of sea captains and others, when no surgeon was on board. Mr. H. continued: "I twisted the ends together loosely so as to make one large one, and let it hang out of the wound over the bone; then I closed all up with stitches and plasters. On the fourth day I found the strings loose in the wound, from which matter had freely come; it beaded up like any other cut." Poor Captain Nye finally met a sad fate; he was drowned on the destruction of his boat by an enraged whale.

The practical anatomist and surgeon will once see the internal evidence of the entire truthfulness of this extraordinary narrative, and the certainty that Mr. Hinckley must have closed up a wound in the subclavian vein. Aside from the position of the wound rendering any other explanation impossible, and the color and amount of blood instantly lost, the fact that a wound of the subclavian artery must have been followed by aneurism, if not instant death, renders the conviction unavoidable that it must have been the vein. When the Captain "groaned terribly," as Mr. Hinckley was drawing up the vessel with his finger, the brachial plexus of nerves was evidently put on the stretch. Indeed, it is impossible to suppose, aside from Mr. Hinckley's high character and the corroboration of the log book, that such a story could have been devised by any but a surgeon of decided practical ability. We may be mistaken in our estimation of its importance, but we think that the evidence of our professional readers will have placed upon record one of the most extraordinary circumstances in the whole history of Surgery.

Production of Oxygen Gas.

M. Bousingault has lately described a process by which pure oxygen gas may be obtained from the atmosphere at a trifling cost, so as to enable it to be collected in unlimited quantities, and preserved in gasometers, like coal-gas, for application to many practical uses in the arts. This process depends upon a peculiar property possessed by the earth barytes, of absorbing the atmospheric oxygen at one temperature and evolving it at another; or rather, the ready conversion of hydrate of barytes into peroxide of barium, by a current of atmospheric air at a dull red heat, and the decomposition of the peroxide, by steam, at a lower temperature, even at 212 deg. F., with reformation of the hydrate of barytes—the process being in reality a continuous one.

It is found in practice advisable to mix the barytes with hydrate of magnesia, so as to prevent the fusing of the first; this mixture, when placed in an earthen tube heated to dull redness, is so oxidized by passing a current of dry atmospheric air over it. So soon as the oxidation is completed, the tube is connected with the gas-holder, and a jet of steam allowed to set upon it; this reconverts the peroxide of barium into hydrate of barytes, the excess of oxygen being given off and collected in the gas-holder. The barytes is then again oxidized by a fresh current of air, and decomposed by steam, as frequently as required, thus making the process continuous. Mess. Bousingault considers that about 1,000 cubic feet of pure oxygen gas could be obtained every twenty-four hours, by the use of 10 cwt. of barytes, which will answer this purpose for any length of time. [Lon. Jour.]

The Narrow Squash.

Much depends upon the manner of planting squash seeds, as well as other seeds, to ensure good crops. Every man's motto should be, "work the soil deep," and with the blessing of God, I shall have vegetables to sell as to keep. When I have planted my squash seeds after the following rule, I have never failed of being well paid for my labor, viz—Dig the holes 10 or 12 inches deep, three feet broad and seven feet apart; throw the top soil on one side, and the bottom soil on the other side of the holes. After digging as many holes as I wish to plant hills, I return the top soil to the bottom of the holes, and then take one bushel or more of well pulverized manure, one peck branched ashes, for each hill, and with a spade or shovel mix well together from top to bottom. Then plant the seeds, leaving the top of the hill level with the surface of the ground, and keep them so during the season. When they are up, and the bugs have done troubling them, thin them out, leaving two or three stalks in each hill, which will cover the ground before the summer is ended. [New England Farmer.]

Long lived People.

Let me now be permitted to delineate the portrait of a man destined to long life. He has a proper and well-proportioned stature, without, however, being too tall. He is rather of the middle size, and somewhat thickset. His complexion is not too florid; at any rate, too much ruddiness in youth is seldom a sign of longevity. His hair approaches rather to the fair than the black; his skin is strong, but not rough. His head is not too big; he has large veins at the extremities, and his shoulders are rather round than flat. His neck is not too long, his abdomen does not project; and his hands are large but not too deeply clef. His foot is rather thick than long; and his legs are firm and round. He has also a broad arched chest; a strong voice, and the faculty of retaining his breath for a long time without difficulty. In general there is a complete harmony in all parts. His senses are good, but not too delicate; his pulse is slow and regular.

His stomach is excellent, his appetite good, and his digestion easy. The joys of the table are to him of importance; they turn his mind to serenity, and his soul partakes in the pleasure which they communicate. He does not eat merely for the sake of eating; but each meal is an hour of daily festivity; a kind of delight attended with this advantage, in regard to others, that it does not make him any poorer, but richer. He eats slowly, and has not too much thirst. Too great thirst is always a sign of rapid self-consumption.

In general, he is serene, judicious, active, susceptible of joy, love, and hope; but insensible to the impressions of hatred, anger, and avarice. His passions never become too violent or destructive. If he ever gives way to anger, he experiences a useful glow of warmth, an artificial and gentle fever, without an overflowing of the bile. He is fond also of employment, particularly calm meditation and agreeable speculation; is an optimist, a friend to nature and domestic felicity, has no thirst after honor or riches, and banishes all thoughts of to-morrow. [Art of Prolong Life.]

Improvement in Making Butter.

M. Chenebrel proposes to introduce a modification in the process of making butter, by which the latter will be improved in quality and rendered capable of being longer kept in a fresh state. If butter contained only the fat or oily part of milk, it would but slowly undergo changes from contact with the air; but it retains a certain quantity of casein, which, transformed by fermentation, given rise to butyric acid, to which rancid butter owes its disagreeable taste. Washing does not effectually remove this cause of alteration, for water cannot act upon butter, nor can it separate the casein which becomes insoluble under the influence of acids developed in cream. A more complete purification may, however, be effected if we saturate or neutralize these acids; the casein will then be rendered soluble, and consequently the butter will only retain in it very small quantities, in a state which it may be almost entirely removed by washing. M. Chenebrel proposes to operate as follows:—When the cream is put in the churn, pour in little by little, and well stir the churn at the same time, a quantity of milk of lime, sufficient to destroy all acidity; when the butter separates, but not till it forms into lumps, as is usually done, strain off the buttermilk, and put cold water in its stead along with the butter in the churn; continue churning till the butter is sufficiently collected, then take it out and make it up in lumps or rolls in the usual way. The butter which has been made according to this method has always proved better and kept much longer fresh than that obtained by the usual mode of proceeding. The buttermilk was free from all acid taste, and was much relished by those persons who used it, and by animals. It had also lost its laxative properties.

Washing with lime water has also restored butter previously so tainted that it could not be used except for melting. Any other alkali wash may be substituted for lime water. [Comptes Rendus.]

PREPARING POULTRY FOR MARKET.—In answer to the question, "How shall I dress and pack my turkeys, geese, ducks, and chickens, to send to New York market?" the N. Y. Tribune says: Hang your turkeys up by the heels, and cut the jugular vein. Pick them dry. Remove the intestines and wipe inside dry. If you use water at all, do it by holding the bird by the legs and letting an assistant pour the water through them. Wipe and hang them up in a cool place twelve hours, or till thoroughly dry. Serve geese, ducks and chickens the same way. Do not scald them, unless you would like to have them spoiled. Take a box that will hold 250 chickens close packed. Put only 200 in it. The remainder of the space fill with Rye straw—clean rye straw—no chaff. Do not use wheat straw, or oat straw, if you can avoid it. You may use coarse, clean, marsh hay. A whip of straw in each box will be advantageous. Nail up your box tight and hoop strong and mark plainly what is in it, and to whom it is sent. Send only in cold weather.

CROTON WATER-WORKS IN EUROPE.—One of our exchanges says that the corner stone of the Croton Water-Works was laid on October 21st. Four hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants will thus be accommodated with the pure element. Mr. Schramke, a German draughtsman, formerly engaged on the Croton Water-Works, returned to Berlin, in 1844, examined the face of the country about the town, and found a series of small lakes, some twelve miles north of it, of such an elevation as could supply a reservoir about sixty feet high on a hill immediately outside the walls. The reservoir will be capable of throwing water into the third or fourth story of every house in Berlin, as that city is on a sandy plain. Every facility exists for constructing these water-works, as the country to be passed through is exceedingly level, and being sandy, is easily dug.

COAL IN INDIANA.—There are in Indiana 7,700 square miles of coal beds. In Great Britain a single square mile of coal area produces annually about 2,570 tons of coal. Her whole coal area, exceeds Indiana's by 4,109 square miles, yet her annual production is 31,500,000 tons. The coal beds of Indiana, worked with an energy commensurate with her capabilities of approximating her productions within 11,000,000 tons, yielding yearly 25,075,150 tons of the mineral; exceeding the present annual product of the whole United States some 15,000,000 tons, and approaching very nearly one half of the total product of the world; for the mines of the Union yield but about 5,000,000, and the mines of the world but about 50,000,000 of tons annually.

HONEST POLICY.—A gentleman one day conversing with a watch-maker upon the dishonest practices of persons in his way of business, was thus addressed by him:—"Sir, I served my apprenticeship with a man who did not fear God, and who consequently was not very scrupulous in the charges which he made to his customers. He used frequently to call me a fool, and tell me I should be in a work-house, when, in his absence, I used to make such charges as appeared to be fair and honest. In course of time I set up in business for myself, and have been so successful as never to have wanted a shilling; whilst my master, who used to reproach me for my honesty, because so reduced in circumstances as to apply to me for a couple of guineas, and did at length himself die in a work-house."

A SHORT VOYAGE AROUND THE GLOBE.—The iron screw steamer Argo, recently arrived at Southampton, Eng., has been round the globe in 128 days. She was 64 days in her passage from Southampton to Melbourne, via the Cape of Good Hope; and occupied the same length of time, in returning via Cape Horn. She is completely self-sufficing, and has an auxiliary steam power of 200 horse, to be used in adverse winds and calms. She has used 2,105 tons of coal, about 17 tons a day, and has averaged 230 miles a day, or about 9½ miles an hour during the entire voyage. In fair winds under canvas, the Argo made 13 and 14 knots an hour for successive days; and 11 and 12 knots, close hauled, with the screw feathered.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscriber manufactures and keeps constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School Bells, and Foundation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with no visible arms. They can be hung at round as the old clapper will strike in a new place which is desirable when a bell has been rung a long time. Bells are also made in a new way to ring the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron castings. At this Foundry these bells were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warranty that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast with out charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 5000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 12 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs for the best Bells for schools, churches and parishes of town. We pay particular attention to getting up bells for Churches, and especially to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is situated on New York of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroad running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S., and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, and other tools. A MENDEL'S SONS West Troy, N. Y.

American Sabbath Tract Society's Publications.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at 10¢ per copy, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y. viz:—
No. 1.—Reasons for Introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment into the celebration of the Christian Sabbath. 20 pp.
No. 2.—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 22 pp.
No. 3.—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 27 pp.
No. 4.—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 50 pp.
No. 5.—A Christian's Covenant to the Old and New Testament. 4 pp.
No. 6.—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
No. 7.—Thirty-six Plain Questions presenting the main points in the Controversy: A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian Controversialist. 8 pp.
No. 8.—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
No. 9.—The Fourth Commandment: A Fair Exposition. 4 pp.
No. 10.—The True Sabbath: A New and Clear Exposition. 16 pp.
No. 11.—Religious Liberty Run: guardedly Legality. 16 pp.
No. 12.—Mosaic of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
No. 13.—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
No. 14.—Deriving Obedience. 4 pp.
No. 15.—An Appeal for the Restoration of the Sabbath, in an Address to the Delegates from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 40 pp.

The Society has also published the following work, to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on its Fourth Commandment. By George Carlow. The printed in London, in 1784; reprinted at Newburgh, N. Y., in 1825; now republished in a revised form. 148 pp.
The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stearns. First printed in London, in 1834. 60 pp.
Validation of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.
Also, a periodical sheet, gratis. The Sabbath Visitor. Price 1¢, 50¢ per hundred.

The series of fifteen tracts, together with Edward Stearns's "Royal Law Contended for," and J. W. Morton's "Validation of the True Sabbath," may be had in a bound volume. Price 50¢ extra.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution on sale, at the rate of 10¢ per copy for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a post-office, to GEORGE B. UZZA, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Soc's Publications.

The Sabbath Recorder, Published Weekly. Terms—$1 00 per Annum, in Advance.

The Sabbath Recorder is devoted to the exposition and vindication of the views and movements of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. It aims to present vital piety and vigorous benevolent action, at the same time that it urges obedience to the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Its columns open to the advocacy of all reformatory measures which tend to improve the human condition, and diffuse knowledge, virtue and happiness in the world. In its Literary and Intellectual Departments, care is taken to furnish matter adapted to the wants and tastes of every class of readers. It is a Religious and Family Newspaper, it is intended for the Sabbath School and the home. It is intended for the Sabbath School and the home.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath-School Visitor, Published Monthly. Terms per Annum—Five Dollars in Advance.

Published by the Sabbath-School Visitor, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

TEACHING NEGROES TO READ.

A case was recently tried in the Circuit Court at Norfolk, Va., which shows in a striking way what kind of laws are considered necessary for the perpetuation of slavery. It appears, that some months ago, information reached His Honor the Mayor, Simon S. Stubbs, Esq., of a school for the education of blacks being in successful operation in the City of Norfolk, under the superintendence of Mrs. Douglas. A warrant was immediately issued, with directions to the officers to bring all parties concerned before him, in order that the matter might be investigated. Upon referring to the residence of Mrs. Douglas, the officers found some eighteen or twenty youthful descendants of Ham engaged in literary pursuits, all of whom, with their teachers, were taken into custody and carried to the Mayor's Office. After a full investigation of the matter, His Honor decided to dismiss the complaint, in order that a Grand Jury might have an opportunity of giving its consideration. At the meeting of the Grand Jury a true bill was found against Mrs. Douglas and her daughter, but the latter having previously gone to New York, process could not be served upon her.

When the trial came on, Mrs. Douglas examined her own witnesses and pleaded her own case. She called up several prominent and respectable gentlemen, members of the Church, for the purpose of showing that the practice of teaching blacks had been sanctioned by the customs of the members of the different Churches in the city in having Sunday Schools exclusively for that purpose. It did not appear, however, from the evidence of any of the gentlemen called upon by Mrs. Douglas, that they had actually seen negroes taught from books in any of the Sunday Schools of the city, but the fact, as stated by them, that nearly all the negroes attending the Sunday Schools could read, gave rise to a suspicion that many of the ladies and gentlemen of the city, moving in the higher circles of society, had been guilty of as flagrant a violation of the law, as could be imputed to Mrs. Douglas and her daughter.

At the conclusion of the evidence, Mrs. Douglas made her appeal to the Jury, which was done in a manner that would have reflected credit on any member of the "strong-minded" "distinction." She declined to deny the charge preferred against her, or to think the responsibility in any way whatever, belonged in the philanthropic duties in which she had been engaged. She denied, however, any knowledge of the existing laws upon the subject, and confidently expected that the Jury would not pronounce her guilty for having committed an error, if such it was, by what she had deemed distinguished precedents. Having concluded her address, she retired from the Court, and the case was briefly concluded by the attorney for the Commonwealth. The Jury could not agree at first, and were adjourned over till next morning, when they found the defendant guilty, and fined her $1. It is said that the Judge, in passing sentence according to the statute, will condemn Mrs. Douglas to imprisonment for not less than six months.

THE NEW CALENDAR.—The insurgents in China have adopted the calendar, as well as the politics of the country. This calendar makes every year to contain three hundred and sixty-six days, every old month thirty-one days, and every new month thirty days. The seasons are commencement of Spring, beginning February 14th; clear and bright season, beginning April 5th; period of boisterous grain, beginning June 5th; commencement of Autumn, August 5th; season of cold dew, date not given; and season of great snow, December 5th.

"The editor of the North China Herald remarks of this new calendar, that it is undertaken to form a solar division of the months, instead of the combination of solar and lunar which has existed from time immemorial. Each of their months consists of two solar terms, or one sign of the zodiac. They also make another error in making the solar year consist of three hundred and sixty-six days every year, instead of one in four years. They also make their Sabbath fall on Saturday."

PETITION TO CONGRESS FOR PROTECTION ON THE SABBATH.—The following petition is being circulated and signed among the German Seventh-day Baptists in Pennsylvania; and they would be glad to have also the signatures of their English brethren. Those friendly to the subject are requested to copy the petition, get as many signatures as they can, and forward to John Moun, Jr., Quincy, Franklin Co., Pa.

We, the subscribers whose names are hereunto annexed, fully believe in the principles of freedom held forth by the Jews and Seventh-day Baptists, that the Government of the United States is bound to protect them on the first day of the week in the performance of their worldly occupations and business, in the same manner as the said Government protects the first-day people on the seventh day of the week in their occupations and business. And your humble petitioners pray to have an act passed to that effect.

TWO SABBATH-SCHOOL VOLUMES.—The third volume of the Sabbath-School Visitor comes with the December number. The first number of the fourth volume will be issued on or before the beginning of the new year. Now is the time, therefore, to renew old subscriptions and obtain new ones. It is hoped that in each of our societies an effort will be made immediately to get up lists of subscribers longer than ever before. The following are the terms:—

One copy to one address..... $ 10
Five copies to one address..... 50
Ten copies to one address..... 1 00
Twenty copies to one address..... 2 00
Thirty copies to one address..... 3 00
Fifty copies to one address..... 5 00

CONGRESS.—The XXXIIIrd Congress of the United States assembled at Washington on Second-day, Dec. 5. Both branches were promptly organized. Lynn Boyd being chosen Speaker of the House. After appointing the usual committees to notify the President, adjourned over to Third-day, when the Message would probably be delivered.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Rev. Jean Vernier, having visited France and Switzerland for the purpose, has obtained two or three ministers of Christ and five or six missionary schoolmasters to labor among the French Catholics. A spirit of inquiry, says Rev. Mr. Wilson, is awakening here and there among the more educated classes; the faith of some in Rome is shaken; the youth particularly, in instances not a few, are thoughtful and desirous to know the truth. "Surely the Lord has purposes of mercy toward Popery-ridden French Canada."

Under the head of "Theological Students," the Christian Intelligencer says that all the colleges are crowded, while the theological seminaries court their students by dozens. Should not these facts awaken the spirit of prayer in the churches for the Spirit of God to descend upon all our colleges and the numerous, or rather innumerable, academies crowded with young men, whose conversion would fill the thin ranks of the ministry?

The Nevada (California) Journal mentions as a curious fact, that many of the Chinese in that region are Protestants, who take oath on the Bible in courts of justice, and say they were converted in China by the labors of a missionary, whom they named with much love. They are peaceable and industrious, and give practical evidence that "their faith is illustrated by works."

A large Protestant bookstore has been established in Constantinople, where there are to be had copies of the Scriptures in twelve different languages. During the past year, more than ten thousand copies of the word of God were sent out from it, besides other religious books and tracts in the various languages of that part of the world.

It appears from a recent return, that the Universities in Germany and Switzerland had, in 1852, 18,181 students, of whom 1,889 were educating for the Catholic priesthood, 1,765 for the Protestant clergy, 6,788 for law and political economy, 4,183 for medicine and surgery, and 2,644 in philosophy.

Another version of the Bible has been completed in the language of the inhabitants of the Hervey group of Islands in the Pacific. The labors of English missionaries among them have been greatly blessed for many years. The Bibles in their native tongue were received with the greatest enthusiasm.

The movement in behalf of church extension in Detroit, which has been some time in anticipation, has been effected. The First Presbyterian church has been sold for some $40,000; and to this sum some $20,000 more has been added, with which it is proposed to erect three Presbyterian churches in that city.

The American and Foreign Bible Society have decided, that the Society is called upon, in the providence of God, to print and circulate, as soon as practicable, at least 50,000 Chinese New Testaments in the vast Empire, and that correspondence be had on this subject with the Missionary Union, Boston.

An old farmer and his wife, residing near Boston, were recently murdered at night. The murderer after his arrest confessed that he had been stimulated to such deeds by reading the biography of criminals, whose feats he desired to emulate.

Hon. Charles Cook, late casual commissioner of New York, is erecting, at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars, a new Episcopal church in the village of Havana, Charming county, to be presented to the society at that place.

One hundred and fifty thousand Bibles and Testaments have been circulated during the last six years in Northern Illinois, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, the weight of which is seventy-five tons.

Rev. Dr. Cox has completed the negotiations, commenced some time since, for the purchase of a residence in Oswego, N. Y. It is designed for the summer residence of his family.

The Sunday-School connected with the First Presbyterian Church of Reading, have raised five hundred and fifty dollars for the Church Extension Fund.

Bishop De Lancy, of New York, and others of his brother bishops, endeavor to account for Bishop Doane's defection to Rome on the ground of insanity.

Among the students of Monro Academy, numbering over one hundred, there has been a gratifying season of religious interest during the Fall term.

By the authority of the "Index Expurgatorum" at Rome D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation has been placed on the list of prohibited books.

Intelligence has been received of the death of Mrs. Nesbitt, of the Bremen Mission.

SLAVERY ITEMS.

The Cincinnati Columbian says: "Last Friday a negro man, the property of James Thornberry, living near Louisville, drew a price of $2,100 in the State Lottery. He is now, perhaps, rich enough to buy himself." To which another paper says: "Yes! but although as rich as Croesus, it all belongs to his master, if he sees fit to claim it, according to slave-holding law. Does any one doubt that any master would be so mean as to appropriate it to his own use? Would it be worse, in any sense, than the case of the master in Covington, who contracted with his slave for the purchase of freedom, and after pocketing the price sold him into perpetual bondage, the Courts sustaining the shameful act?"

Wylie Kearney, of Caldwell County, Ky., was murdered last week by his two slaves, boys of 18 and 19 years, who made up a plot and executed it in revenge of his cruelty to them. While going out into the field to labor, he thrashed one of them, who resisted, the other coming to his aid. One of the two slipped up behind his master and threw a rope over his head, whereupon each one caught the ends of the rope and brought him to the ground, and with the rope and their hands killed him instantly by choking.

The Louisville Courier of the 12th ult., says that Col. John Reid, of Mason County, Ky., who had been for some days in that city on a visit, received intelligence that four of his slaves had been sent away from his farm. Two of them, however, were subsequently captured, together with the white man who had been assisting them freedomward.

A lot of slaves, numbering sixteen, belonging to the heirs of Andrew P. Balme, were sold at auction in Monroe County, Va., a few days ago, for $12,000. The Farmer's Friend says that three of them were infants, and one a very old woman. Twelve of them averaged $1,000 each, of which seven women and two of the men were only second or third rate.

Judy, a female slave on the plantation of Mr. E. B. Richardson, Blad County, North Carolina, recently died at the great age of 110. She was one of the eight slaves who nearly sixty years ago were the first settlers on the estate upon which she died, all but one of whom have reached a very advanced age.

The New Orleans Bulletin of Nov. 22d says: Three slaves were arraigned before the Recorder yesterday for gambling in a back-house at the corner of Benjamin and New Orleans, and ordered to receive twenty lashes each, when their masters shall call for them. The slave Peter, belonging to a Mr. Pepper, was ordered to receive ten lashes for carrying a concealed weapon and threatening W. J. Redwood. The slaves are making "progress," evidently, and seem disposed to acquire fashionable habits.

The people of Alabama are vigorously agitating in favor of a law exempting slaves from execution for debt. The object of the law is to enable every man to own and keep one or more slaves, and thereby fortify and strengthen the Institution, giving the poorer classes an interest in its eternal perpetuity.

Last Saturday (says the Louisville Courier of Nov. 24) a fugitive slave, belonging to Judge Finch, of this State, was captured in Jackson County, Ind., and given over to his owner. There was with him at the time he was taken a white girl, who had induced him to make his escape that he might join himself for life to his dark fortune.

We find the following paragraph in the Cincinnati Commercial of the 14th ult.: "Slave stampedes in Kentucky are becoming alarmingly frequent. On the night before last, three more escaped by means of flatboat skiffs, across the river, this side of Mayfield."

SLAVERYING JUSTICE.—The Richmond, Va., Mail of Nov. 24th, gives the following as an item of news, with no apparent consciousness of the cruel injustice it records, or the disgrace such a fact attaches to the community where it occurred:—

A mulatto woman, named Ann Matthews, was brought before the Mayor, yesterday, charged with being free and remaining in the Commonwealth contrary to law. From the evidence before the Mayor, it appeared that she is the property of Edward Matthews, who hires her to Mr. John L. Lupton, who has her at a slave jail for the last three and a half years. About five years ago she was permitted by her owner to visit Philadelphia, where she remained three or four months, and left there a child, when she returned to Virginia, which child, we inferred from remarks at the examination yesterday, she had been in the habit of visiting. Mr. Matthews still claims her as his servant, and has more than once threatened to sell her. The Mayor discharged her, while he informed her owner and hired her that he should instruct the Police of the city to regard her as a slave, and see that she should not be allowed the privileges of a free woman.

THE WEAKNESS OF SLAVERY.—A discussion has been going on for some time in Alabama, as to the propriety of exempting a certain number of slaves from forced sale under execution, and a law insuring some provisions of this character, it is thought, will be enacted at the ensuing Legislature of the State. Its object is evidently and avowedly to strengthen the system of slavery, by increasing the number of slaveholders. It is in fact a bribe to men of small means to become personally interested in slavery by investing their capital in a species of property which may be held in spite of creditors. It is, moreover, to be made beneficial to the State in another way, as the persons applying for the benefit of it are to pay a bonus of twenty-five dollars for every slave, not exceeding five, so exempted, and the fund so created is to be used for purposes of education. The whole scheme is an acknowledgment of the weakness of slavery, as it is based upon the fact that there is a large class which is not interested in the perpetuation of the system, and whose support it is worth while to purchase.

SUMMARY.

In the winter of 1848, the Rev. Thomas Waring mysteriously disappeared near Elizabethtown, Ky., and was then still believed by his relatives and friends to have been murdered. Some year or more before the death of Mr. W., he had effected an insurance on his life, in favor of his wife, in the Nautilus Mutual Life Insurance Co. of N. Y. for $4,000. The Company, it appears, refused to pay the insurance to his widow, alleging that he was not dead, but had absconded. Suit was entered, and the case was decided in favor of Mrs. W. for the full amount, with interest.

A dispatch dated Pittsburgh, Friday, Dec. 2, 1853, says: Yesterday seventy suits under the Small Note law against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. six against the Citizens' Deposit Co., fourteen against the Allegheny Savings Fund, sixty-two against the Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and thirteen against the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Co. were brought by Abraham Morris, late dry-goods merchant of this city, and two others, one a citizen of Ohio. The supposed object is to obtain full of the paucity, which will amount to a large sum.

The "Prohibitionist" is the name of a new monthly quarto which the New York State Temperance Society propose to issue at Albany on the 1st of January next and of every month thereafter. It will be afforded at 50 cents per copy, fifty copies for $11, and one hundred copies for $20, and is intended to be distributed broadcast through the efforts of the friends of Temperance in the various localities. Address Wm. H. Burleigh, Cor. Secretary, or O. Scoville, Publishing Agent, Albany.

Further particulars of the blowing up of the propeller Independence, at Saint Ste. Marie, have reached us. The explosion was caused by the neglect to let off steam during a stoppage for the purpose of completing the raising of the anchor. Seven lives were lost in all, and it is miraculous that the sacrifice was not greater, when it is considered that the boat was blown to atoms, with the exception of 25 feet of the bow.

Leban Mercer, arrested in Wetzel Co., Va., for murder, on the testimony of a ghost, has been sent on for trial at the spring term of the Circuit Court. The popular sentiment is very strong against him in his neighborhood.

A second edition of the Siamese Twins has lately been issued in North Carolina. The North Carolina, Nov. 26, says: "The twins are negro children, 28 months old, naturally joined together in a remarkable manner. Their spines seem to grow together near their lower termination, and to form one common base. Above and below the point of junction they are entirely separate. They are females, and are quite lively and intelligent. Each preserves a distinct identity of feeling and action." They are now on exhibition at Fayetteville.

A dispatch dated Washington, Friday, Dec. 2, 1853, says: "I have private advice from the City of Mexico to the 17th ult., to the effect that letters received there from Tepic, dated Nov. 12, state that two hundred armed men from San Francisco had just landed from the brig Carolina, at the port of La Paz; Lower California, and had taken possession of the town, put the Commanding General in prison, and declared Lower California independent. They have a flag, with two stars, which is supposed by my Mexican informant to mean Lower California and Sonora."

Mr. Thompson, one of the oldest shipmasters of New York, recently deceased, bequeathed ample provision for his family, bequeathed $2,500 to each of the following societies: The New York Asylum for Lying-in-women; the Association for the Relief of Respectable and Aged Females; the Marine Society of the City of New York; the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seamen in the City and port of New York; and the Mariners' Church in Rochester-st.

The Governor of South Carolina, in his Message, says that the funded debt of the State is $1,570,956; the assets, $3,135,542. The Governor recommends a subscription of three-quarters of a million to the Blue Ridge Railroad, and the establishment of an improved system of education, with Commissioners of Public Instruction. He desires that the U. S. Supreme Court shall settle the disputed boundary with Georgia. The Governor is much pleased with the behavior of England in the matter of the imprisonment of colored men.

Mrs. Ward, a respectable woman living in Ashley County, Arkansas, was, a few nights since, "informed by a spirit" that her left hand had offended her Maker, and that to make her peace she must part with it. Mrs. Ward immediately got out of bed, procured an axe, and cut off her hand at the wrist. She then awoke her husband, telling him what she had done and why she had done it.

The Savannah Register relates the case of James Moran, aged 25, who drank himself to death on the 25th ult. He was a brilliant young man, and served in the Mexican war. He had often made attempts to forsake the bottle, by signing the pledge and joining the Sons of Temperance; but he was unsuccessful, and, as a last resort, strongly desired the enactment of the Maine Law in the State.

A slave, once the property of Bismarck, is now living on the plantation of Capt. Scott, near Jefferson, Texas. He was on Beecher's Island when the militia were sent there to arrest his master, and he remembers the incident well. He describes Aaron Burr as being the finest gentleman he ever saw, and says "white women in these days can't come up to what Mrs. Beecherism was."

Capt. J. Everson has recently secured a patent for glass tubes to conduct water from wells and cisterns, which supercedes those made of lead, iron, or wood. It is a wonder that some enterprising Yankees had not thought of this a half century since, as it is one of the most simple though useful inventions of the day.

One of the four convicts who escaped from the Charleston State Prison, Tuesday night, named Campbell, has been captured near Concord, having become weary from travel. He was sick with consumption. On Wednesday night the four went to a house in Lexington, and compelled a woman to give them all the food she had.

The receipts of the Erie Railroad for November are $143,050 over the estimate made in the early part of the year, and nearly 45 per cent. larger than for the same month of last year. The figures are: November, 1852, $208,287 50; November, 1853, $248,828 50. Increase, $154,488 61.

A dispatch dated Whitehall, N. Y., Saturday, Dec. 3, 1853, says: Last night, near this place, a freight train of twenty-five cars ran over a cow, throwing the engine and several of the cars from the track. The engineer, Mr. McMillen, was killed, and two cars full of logs pitched into the canal.

The Chicago Tribune of the 7th Nov., says it has received a telegraphic dispatch from Quincy, informing it that thirteen negroes, men, women and children, had left Mexico County, Missouri, by the underground railroad, for parts unknown.

In Boston, on Friday, an Irishman performed the astonishing feat of falling from the roof of the new Opera House to the collar, a distance of ninety feet, alighting among barrels and rubbish, without receiving any injury.

Judge Pett, of Indiana, has decided that the fugitive law passed in that State last winter is unconstitutional, and has discharged those who had been arrested charged with breaking that law.

A young lady of Hancock County, Indiana, has recovered a verdict of $3,000 against a young man in a suit for slander. A twin sister of the lady some time since recovered $1,700 from the same man.

A man named Charles Clarke was arrested in Philadelphia on Monday, charged with counterfeiting, and upwards of $50,000 in spurious notes, plates, &c., were seized on his premises.

Mr. Deice Allen and Miss Eliza W. Duggan, were recently married in Rochester, N. Y., by Rev. Mrs. Antoinette L. Brown. This is probably the first marriage ceremony ever performed by a woman in this country.

A verdict of $10,000 has been rendered in Orange Co., N. C., against Col. J. Douglas, a wealthy married man, for the seduction of Margaret Holman.

The Hon. C. G. Atherton, recently deceased, has left $5,000 to President Pierce, and the bulk of his property, upward of $120,000, to his wife and cousin.

Wm. Tinsley has been convicted in the U. S. Circuit Court of North Carolina of embezzling letters from the Post-Office.

The editor of the Rome Farmer has established a peculiar tariff of charges for the publication of marriage notices. For a notice where the wife is a first rate one, $1 is charged, and from that down to nothing, just according to the estimate of the husband. In one week several notices were received, accompanied by one dollar, and only one with less. One fellow alone valued his wife at fifty cents.

A detachment of an exploring party, near Salt Lake, was attacked by a party of Indians, and eight of them killed, including Capt. Gunnison, and Mr. Kern, the topographical engineer, and Wm. Porter, the guide.

Capt. J. Everson, of Memphis, Tenn., has recently secured a patent for glass tubes to conduct water from wells and cisterns, which supercedes those made of lead, iron or wood.

A female slave of Secretary Guthrie, while in Cincinnati, on the way to Washington, in charge of a clerk of the Secretary, last week, absconded, and has not since been heard of.

Rev. E. M. Rolin, of Sandlake, has been called to the Presbyterian church at Greenback, Rensselaer county.

The ship Marathon, from Liverpool, which arrived at New York last week, lost 64 out of 522 emigrant passengers, by cholera.

The cholera is raging in New Orleans, and 129 persons died of it during the week ending Nov. 25th.

The notes of the Patchin Bank of Buffalo are redeemed at the Agency in Albany, at the usual rate for New York State money.

Madame Rachel, the French Actress, is to receive $50,000 for a six months' engagement in St. Petersburg.

An emigrant party of thirty persons, destined for Nebraska Territory, passed through Cincinnati, Dec. 1.

Class Dickens is on a walking excursion through Italy, sustaining health, and picking up facts for future use.

Lewis A. Emory, of Herkimer, N. Y., a medium, committed suicide last week.

New York Market—December 4, 1853.

WHEAT.—No. 1 for export, 65 1/2 c; No. 2 for export, 64 1/2 c; No. 3 for export, 63 1/2 c; No. 4 for export, 62 1/2 c; No. 5 for export, 61 1/2 c; No. 6 for export, 60 1/2 c; No. 7 for export, 59 1/2 c; No. 8 for export, 58 1/2 c; No. 9 for export, 57 1/2 c; No. 10 for export, 56 1/2 c; No. 11 for export, 55 1/2 c; No. 12 for export, 54 1/2 c; No. 13 for export, 53 1/2 c; No. 14 for export, 52 1/2 c; No. 15 for export, 51 1/2 c; No. 16 for export, 50 1/2 c; No. 17 for export, 49 1/2 c; No. 18 for export, 48 1/2 c; No. 19 for export, 47 1/2 c; No. 20 for export, 46 1/2 c; No. 21 for export, 45 1/2 c; No. 22 for export, 44 1/2 c; No. 23 for export, 43 1/2 c; No. 24 for export, 42 1/2 c; No. 25 for export, 41 1/2 c; No. 26 for export, 40 1/2 c; No. 27 for export, 39 1/2 c; No. 28 for export, 38 1/2 c; No. 29 for export, 37 1/2 c; No. 30 for export, 36 1/2 c; No. 31 for export, 35 1/2 c; No. 32 for export, 34 1/2 c; No. 33 for export, 33 1/2 c; No. 34 for export, 32 1/2 c; No. 35 for export, 31 1/2 c; No. 36 for export, 30 1/2 c; No. 37 for export, 29 1/2 c; No. 38 for export, 28 1/2 c; No. 39 for export, 27 1/2 c; No. 40 for export, 26 1/2 c; No. 41 for export, 25 1/2 c; No. 42 for export, 24 1/2 c; No. 43 for export, 23 1/2 c; No. 44 for export, 22 1/2 c; No. 45 for export, 21 1/2 c; No. 46 for export, 20 1/2 c; No. 47 for export, 19 1/2 c; No. 48 for export, 18 1/2 c; No. 49 for export, 17 1/2 c; No. 50 for export, 16 1/2 c; No. 51 for export, 15 1/2 c; No. 52 for export, 14 1/2 c; No. 53 for export, 13 1/2 c; No. 54 for export, 12 1/2 c; No. 55 for export, 11 1/2 c; No. 56 for export, 10 1/2 c; No. 57 for export, 9 1/2 c; No. 58 for export, 8 1/2 c; No. 59 for export, 7 1/2 c; No. 60 for export, 6 1/2 c; No. 61 for export, 5 1/2 c; No. 62 for export, 4 1/2 c; No. 63 for export, 3 1/2 c; No. 64 for export, 2 1/2 c; No. 65 for export, 1 1/2 c; No. 66 for export, 1/2 c; No. 67 for export, 1/4 c; No. 68 for export, 1/8 c; No. 69 for export, 1/16 c; No. 70 for export, 1/32 c; No. 71 for export, 1/64 c; No. 72 for export, 1/128 c; No. 73 for export, 1/256 c; No. 74 for export, 1/512 c; No. 75 for export, 1/1024 c; No. 76 for export, 1/2048 c; No. 77 for export, 1/4096 c; No. 78 for export, 1/8192 c; No. 79 for export, 1/16384 c; No. 80 for export, 1/32768 c; No. 81 for export, 1/65536 c; No. 82 for export, 1/131072 c; No. 83 for export, 1/262144 c; No. 84 for export, 1/524288 c; No. 85 for export, 1/1048576 c; No. 86 for export, 1/2097152 c; No. 87 for export, 1/4194304 c; No. 88 for export, 1/8388608 c; No. 89 for export, 1/16777216 c; No. 90 for export, 1/33554432 c; No. 91 for export, 1/67108864 c; No. 92 for export, 1/134217728 c; No. 93 for export, 1/268435456 c; No. 94 for export, 1/536870912 c; No. 95 for export, 1/1073741824 c; No. 96 for export, 1/2147483648 c; No. 97 for export, 1/4294967296 c; No. 98 for export, 1/8589934592 c; No. 99 for export, 1/17179869184 c; No. 100 for export, 1/34359738368 c; No. 101 for export, 1/68719476736 c; No. 102 for export, 1/137438953472 c; No. 103 for export, 1/274877906944 c; No. 104 for export, 1/549755813888 c; No. 105 for export, 1/1099511627776 c; No. 106 for export, 1/2199023255552 c; No. 107 for export, 1/4398046511104 c; No. 108 for export, 1/8796093022208 c; No. 109 for export, 1/17592186044416 c; No. 110 for export, 1/35184372088832 c; No. 111 for export, 1/70368744177664 c; No. 112 for export, 1/140737488355328 c; No. 113 for export, 1/281474976710656 c; No. 114 for export, 1/562949953421312 c; No. 115 for export, 1/1125899906842624 c; No. 116 for export, 1/2251799813685248 c; No. 117 for export, 1/4503599627370496 c; No. 118 for export, 1/9007199254740992 c; No. 119 for export, 1/18014398509481984 c; No. 120 for export, 1/36028797018963968 c; No. 121 for export, 1/72057594037927936 c; No. 122 for export, 1/144115188075855872 c; No. 123 for export, 1/288230376151711744 c; No. 124 for export, 1/576460752303423488 c; No. 125 for export, 1/1152921504606846976 c; No. 126 for export, 1/2305843009213693952 c; No. 127 for export, 1/4611686018427387904 c; No. 128 for export, 1/9223372036854775808 c; No. 129 for export, 1/18446744073709551616 c; No. 130 for export, 1/36893488147419103232 c; No. 131 for export, 1/73786976294838206464 c; No. 132 for export, 1/147573952589676412928 c; No. 133 for export, 1/295147905179352825856 c; No. 134 for export, 1/590295810358705651712 c; No. 135 for export, 1/1180591620717411303424 c; No. 136 for export, 1/2361183241434822606848 c; No. 137 for export, 1/4722366482869645213696 c; No. 138 for export, 1/9444732965739290427392 c; No. 139 for export, 1/18889465931478580854784 c; No. 140 for export, 1/37778931862957161709568 c; No. 141 for export, 1/75557863725914323419136 c; No. 142 for export, 1/151115727451828646838272 c; No. 143 for export, 1/302231454903657293676544 c; No. 144 for export, 1/604462909807314587353088 c; No. 145 for export, 1/1208925819614629174706176 c; No. 146 for export, 1/2417851639229258349412352 c; No. 147 for export, 1/4835703278458516698824704 c; No. 148 for export, 1/9671406556917033397649408 c; No. 149 for export, 1/19342813113834066795298816 c; No. 150 for export, 1/38685626227668133590597632 c; No. 151 for export, 1/77371252455336267181195264

Miscellaneous.

Autumn Woods.

BY WILLIAM C. BENTLEY.

"O'er the southern pine,
The summer breeze of the trees are green,
The woods of Autumn all around our vale,
Have put their glory on.

The mountain that loomed
In their white sweep, the colored landscape round,
The green of the hills, the purple and gold,
That guard the enchanted ground.

I roam the woods that crown
The peaks, where the mingled splendor glow,
Where the gay company of trees look down
On the green fields below.

My steps are not alone
In these bright woods, the sweet south-west, at play,
The rustling, where the painted leaves are stirred
Along the winding way.

And far in hollow, the white,
The sun, that would that pale to wander here,
Pours out on the earth his golden rain,
The sweetest of the year.

Where now the green shade
Verdure and green where many branches meet;
So grateful, when the sun of summer made
The valley all with heat.

Let it be through the trees
Come the strong rays, the forest deep are bright;
Their many-colored foliage, in the breeze,
Twinkles, like home of light.

The rivulet, like a stream,
Where flickering through the shrubs its waters run,
Shines with the rays of its golden screen,
And glimmers of the sun.

But 'neath the crimson tree
Lovers to the forest might breathe his flame,
Nor mark, within the forest shade,
Her blush of red and flame.

O, Autumn! why art thou
Depart the forest, and the forest glad;
The golden sun, the forest glad to stray,
And leave the forest and the forest glad.

All! there is no more
Forever in the forest, the forest glad to stray,
And leave the forest and the forest glad,
To leave the forest and the forest glad.

That makes me, and the forest glad to stray,
The forest and the forest glad to stray,
And leave the forest and the forest glad,
To leave the forest and the forest glad.

White-washing Extraordinary.

The Rev. James Williams, the well-known philanthropic missionary, so long resident in the South Sea Islands, taught the natives how to manufacture lime from the coral of their shores. The powerful effect it produced upon them, and the extraordinary uses to which they applied it, he thus facetiously describes:

"After having laughed at the process of burning, which they believed to be to cook the coral for their food, what was their astonishment, when, in the morning, they found his cottage glittering in the rising sun white as snow—they danced, they sang, they shouted, and screamed with joy. The whole island was in commotion, given up to wonder and curiosity, and the laughable scenes which ensued after they had obtained possession of the brush and tub, defies description. The boys immediately voted it a cosmetic and kalydno, and a relatively happy did many a swarthy complexion consider herself, could she but enhance her charms by a dab of the white brush. And now party spirit ran high, as it will do in more civilized countries, as to who was, or who was not, best entitled to preference. One party urged their superior rank; one had got the brush and was determined at all events to keep it; and a third tried to overturn the whole, that they might obtain some of the sweepings. They did not even scruple to rob each other of the little share that some had been so happy as to secure. But some new time was prepared, and in a week, not a hair, a domestic utensil, a war club, or a garment, but what was white as snow—not an inhabitant but had a skin painted with the most grotesque figures—not a pig but was entirely whitened—and even mothers might be seen in every direction, capering with extravagant gestures, and yelling with delight at the superior beauty of their white-washed infants.

The Chinese Emperor and the Pretender.

It is a singular circumstance, that the two principal competitors in this tremendous struggle are two young men scarcely past their boyhood. The emperor Hienfong is but twenty-two. He is of middling stature, and his limbs bear evidence to his aptness for physical exertion; he is slender and muscular. His physiognomy, which indicates resolution, is chiefly characterized by a very high forehead, and by the obliquity of his vision. His cheek bones are very prominent, and the space between his eyes is wide and flat like the brow of a buffalo. His character is marked by firmness and credulity. In the midst of luxury and effeminacy, he affects severe manners, and notwithstanding his youth, he is already married. The empress is a Tartar princess, with large feet, who has none of the delicacy and delicate graces of the small-footed ladies of China. The emperor loves to see her indulge in the violent exercises that amuse the women of her nation, and she often exerts at his side through the immense gardens of the palace.

The chief of the insurrection, Tiente, is twenty-three, but study and vigil have prematurely aged him. He is grave and melancholy, and lives in great retirement, communicating with those around him only to give his orders. His face wears an expression of gentleness, but that gentleness peculiar to certain species, which does not exclude the idea of ferocity, or a kind of obsequiousness often found in creole natures. His complexion is that of the Chinese of the Southern provinces—a sort of saffron. He is taller than Hienfong, but he appears less robust. Both have felt the influence of their education, and the moral is reflected in the physical formation. The young emperor, active, daring, with a bold glance, commands with laughter, and wishes to be blindly obeyed. Tiente, on the contrary, has an impassable gaze, that seems to lift, one by one, the folds that envelop the human soul, and plunge into its depths. He commands rather by suggestion than by direct dictation; in a word, he has the silent reserve of a man who has reflected much before disclosing his projects to any one. As to his general appearance, a Chinese gives the following description of the pretender's entrance into one of the numerous towns taken by his troops: "The new emperor's train reminded me of the scenes represented at our theatres, and the pieces in which we see the heroes of ancient times who lived before we submitted to the yoke of the Tartars. The persons who surrounded Tiente had cut off their tails, let the whole of their hair grow, and instead of the change, buttoned at the side, they wore tunics open in front. None of the officers were on their right thumb the pen-take, that archer's ring which our mandarins display with so much ostentation. The emperor was in a magnificent palanquin, enveloped in yellow satin curtains, and carried by sixteen officers. After Tiente's palanquin came that of his preceptor, borne upon the shoulders of eight coolies; then came his thirty wives in painted and gilded chairs, and a multitude of servants and soldiers in beautiful order."

Villages and Country Life in France.

In this ride from north to south we had a fine opportunity of seeing the country portions of France. In the main, the face of the country is very level, and is well cultivated. The people live in villages; and neither horses nor cattle are seen dispersed over the country as in Britain or with us. If now and then you see a cow feeding by the wayside, it has always an attendant to keep it within bounds. There are no fences to be seen any where, and lines of trees running for miles without deviating from a straight line, constantly present themselves, till the eye is weary of seeing them. Where nothing richer can grow, the vines are sure to be planted. The hills are all vine clad, and are often prettily terraced for its cultivation. The vines are planted about as far apart as our hills of corn; the old stump seemed only a foot or two high; and the branches from the stump are only permitted to grow four or five feet long. Thus the strength of the tree is thrown into the fruit, instead of being permitted to expend itself in the production of long branches and many leaves. Vineyards thus cultivated were every where to be seen. They ran up the sides of the most steep acclivities, and capped the summits of the highest hills. Because they can stick a vine anywhere, the entire surface of the country is producing something.

The villages through which we passed present a very strong contrast to our American villages. The streets are so narrow as often to render it impossible for two carriages to pass each other. The houses are built directly on the street, without door-yard or pavement in front. Sometimes the horses are eating on the first floor, while you are eating on the second. And the air of neatness, cleanliness and comfort which is worn by our best American villages is generally absent from those of France.

The peasantry also seemed uncultivated, and of a low state of civilization. Women were every where working in the fields, and were doing all kinds of manual labor. And all along the canal, on the borders of which we traveled many miles, men were drawing the boat. The women seemed to be doing the work of men, and men the work of horses. In countries which support large standing armies, the men are needed for armies, for the deadly breach, as food for the cannon; and hence, the cultivation of the country must, of necessity, devolve upon women, if it is done at all; we have seen men directing gangs of women in the field, as it is said drivers superintend gangs of negroes on some of our southern plantations. When there, France was a republic; and yet soldiers were met every where. The people killed a republic, and legions of armed men were needed to induce the people to respect it! What a riddle are the French people.

Building in the Scotch Highlands.

The manners and customs of the Highlanders in the neighborhood of the Queen's residence are, we need hardly say, most peculiar; but their obstinate adherence to the "old way" of doing everything, is their most remarkable feature. They build now precisely in the same way they built in the time of Wallace. If they are to construct an edifice in the present day, they usually disdain the erection of anything like a scaffolding, and reject with contempt the use of ropes, pulleys, blocks, the windlass or the crane, and, in short, any of the modern appliances which science has devised for the saving of labor. It will scarcely be credited by our readers, that her Majesty's new castle at Balmoral is being built at this moment in the manner we describe. Scaffolding there is none. Every square piece of granite is carried singly on a Highlander's back, up a narrow, zigzag platform, supported on trellis, and is deposited by him where it is to be placed. If a large block for the foundation is to be conveyed from the quarry, stout poles are placed under it, and with four Highlanders on each side, it is carried to its destination. A wagon, with a team of horses, is a thing unknown; but it is astonishing the weight the men can transport. The pieces of granite are from two to three feet long, and proportionately thick; one of these is placed between the man's shoulders, which are protected by coarse, thick sackcloth, and with his hands behind him, supporting the weight, he bends forward, and moves up the narrow inclined plane with an ease and celerity which are perfectly marvelous. In this primitive way, her Majesty's new castle at Balmoral is now being built, but, at the same time, we are bound to admit that it will be a most beautiful edifice.

The Preservation of Eggs for Winter Use.

The great secret, then, of preserving eggs, is to keep the interior in an unwhetted state. It is best done by lime-water, in which a little common salt is infused. This constitutes a fluid perfectly indestructible by air, and one that is so allied to the nature of the shell as not to be absorbed by it, or through it into the interior of the egg. On the other hand, salt or lime in a dry state will act on the moisture of the egg, as will strong acids. This plan, also, will save more eggs in a given space than any other. It will also admit of keeping them in casks over so damp, and I had almost said over so foul, since nothing will be likely to act on the lime-water. As eggs are very nearly of the specific gravity of water, I have little doubt that eggs barreled up tightly in lime-water could be transported quite as safely as pork.

Lime-water may be made in the most careful manner. Seven hundred pounds of water will dissolve about one pound of lime. A pint of lime, therefore, thrown into a barrel of water, is enough, while ten times as much can do no harm, and will not alter the strength of it. The salt, which I do not deem very important, should be used in small quantities, say a quart to a barrel. All are aware that a very large quantity of salt may be dissolved in water. Bring strong enough for pork would undoubtedly hurt eggs.

Having made your lime-water in barrels if you are a merchant, and in a stone pot if you are a small house-holder—drop your eggs on the top of the water, and they will settle down safely. It is probably important that no bad eggs go in, as it is supposed by some that it would injure others. To test your eggs, put them in clean water; reject all that rise. A better remedy is to look at them through a tube—say a roll of paper—by daylight, or between your eye and a candle by night. If the eggs are fresh, they will in either case look transparent. If they are a little injured, they will look darkish; if they are much injured, they will look entirely dark.

Eggs put up in this manner will keep I cannot tell how long, but until they are much more plenty and cheaper than at present—quite long enough.

Leached ashes, well dried, and even grain, have kept eggs very well, in my experience, but no method is so obvious and cheap as the lime-water. As lime absorbs carbonic acid slowly, and thus becomes insoluble, so almost any lime, even though it has been slacked for months, will answer the purpose. Lime-water permitted to stand still, will immediately become covered with a transparent film. This is the lime of the water uniting with the carbonic acid of the atmosphere, and returning to the state of limestone, and does not hurt the eggs. [Country Gentleman.]

Value of Leaves.

Pagen and Boissengault give analyses of leaves from several different trees. Taking the average of all their analyses, leaves contain 1.13 per cent. of nitrogen, while farm yard dung contains only 0.41 per cent. In all vegetable or animal substances that will decompose readily, their true manurial value is in direct proportion to the amount of nitrogen they contain. Hence, leaves are worth three times as much as common barn-yard manure.

But we need not dwell on the theoretical value of leaves. Every gardener knows, from observation and experience, that nothing makes such a valuable compost as the leaves and other rubbish of the orchard and garden. This is owing partly to their chemical composition, and partly to their absorbent properties. Their porosity is so great that they will condense and retain large quantities of ammoniacal gas, and thus prevent its escape from the decomposing compost.

Every fruit grower and gardener, not to say every farmer, should take up all the leaves on his premises and make them into a compost with seedless weeds and manure, covering the heap with a coat of loamy soil, and saturating it, during winter, with soap suds, &c., from the house. In the spring he will have spit manure of great value for garden crops.

Slaves in Russia.

Of the fifty-three and a half millions of people which Russia contained in 1842, not less than forty-two millions were slaves; of these, fifteen millions were slaves of the Crown, or of the Emperor! The Russian slaves have no legal rights; in that they are no better than the negroes of the Southern States. The Russian people are not only slaves to their nobles, but they are slaves to the soil. The land of Russia is valuable of itself; its value consists in the human property belonging to it, and from which the nobles derive their chief revenue. Practically, the private serf of Russia—and there are above forty millions of such—is, in life and limb, at the disposal of its owner, as completely as slaves have ever been in any country, he can be sold and lived out as a beast of burden. The law, it is true, now wills that a certain portion of the land must be sold with him; but the land in Russia is, as we have said, of mere nominal value. The master may remove one or all of his slaves for life from one estate to another, though thousands of miles apart. In purchasing a slave, he has only to go through the formality of receiving from the former owner a few acres with him, of which he soon forgets the possession, and from which he may remove the slave, separating him forever from his wife and children, and dooming him to perpetual banishment from his home.

The Russian slaves, male or female, cannot marry without the permission of their owner; and, as in the case of negroes in the Southern States, there are no purposes, even the most infamous, to which the female slave is not liable to be devoted, and frequently applied. The master may at any time send his male slave to Siberia, or for a soldier—and some he must constantly choose for this service. The owner may flog his slave to death, but the law only permits him to be flogged. The law forbids any court to receive the evidence of the slave against his master. By a royal ukase issued by the monster Catherine, and since confirmed by Nicholas, if a serf makes any complaint to his superior against his lord, "he shall be amenable to the punishment which the laws award"—that is, to the punishment of death! But there is no law in Russia except the despotic will of the head slave owner. Paschkin, the Russian writer, emphatically observes, "There is no law in Russia; the law is nailed to a stake, and that stake wears the crown."

A Beautiful Picture.

The man who stands upon his own soil, who feels that by the laws of the land in which he lives—by the laws of civilized nations—he is the rightful and exclusive owner of the land which he tills, is by the constitution of our nature under a wholesome influence not easily imbibed from any other source. He feels, other things being equal, more strongly than another the character of a man as lord of the animate world. Of this great and wonderful sphere, which, fashioned by the hand of God, and upheld by his power, is rolling 'round' the heavens, a part is his—his from the center sky. It is the space on which the generation before moved in its round of duties, and he feels himself connected by a visible link with those who follow him, and to whom he is to transmit a home. Perhaps his farm has come down to him from his fathers. They have gone to their last home; but he can trace their foot steps over the scenes of his daily labors. The roof that shelters him was reared by those to whom he owes his being. Some interesting domestic tradition is connected with every enclosure. The favorite fruit tree was planted by his father's hand. He sported in boyhood beside the brook which still winds the path to the village school of earlier days. He still hears from his window the voice of the Sabbath bell which called his father to the house of God; and near at hand is the spot where his parents laid down to rest, and where, when his time has come, he shall be laid by his children. These are the feelings of the owners of the soil. Words cannot paint them, gold cannot buy them; they flow out of the deepest fountains of the heart, they are the life-springs of a fresh, healthy, and generous national character. [Edward Everett.]

Self-made Men.

"If you are to be an exception," said Mr. Crabbe to his young friend, "you will be the first in all my observation and experience. You may take the whole population of Maryland, and select from it the fifty men who are most distinguished for talent, or any description of public usefulness, and I will answer for it, they are all, every one of them, men who began the world without a dollar. Look into the public councils of the nation, and who are they who take the lead there? They are men who made their own fortunes—self-made men, who began with nothing. The rule is universal. It pervades our courts, State and Federal, from the highest to the lowest. It is true of all the professions. It is so now; it has been so at any time since I have known the public men of this State or the Nation; and it will be so while our present institutions continue. You must throw a man on his own resources to bring him out. The struggle which is to result in eminence is too arduous, and must be continued too long, to be encountered and maintained voluntarily, or unless as a matter of life and death. He who has fortune to fall back upon will soon slacken from his efforts, and finally retire from the competition. With me it is a question whether it is desirable that a parent should be able to leave his son any property at all. You will have a large fortune, and I am sorry for it, as it will be the spoiling of a good lawyer. These are my deliberate sentiments, and I shall be rejoiced to find, in your instance, I shall have been mistaken."

American Slave Papers.

The London News pays the following handsome compliment to American statesmanship:

"From the time of Alexander Hamilton to that of Edward Everett, the reports and correspondence sent out by Congressional Committees and heads of departments have been of such singular merit as to fix the attention of society in Europe, wherever the English language is familiarly read. The wonder is less, to persons familiar with the structure and workings of the American Government, than to those who know only European ways. The statesmen at Washington are usually educated gentlemen and men of business at once—usually professional men, who yet have had occasion, in the course of their lives, to do with their own hands much of the real business of life; and there is nothing like that sort of experience, when combined with a liberal education, for enabling men to take and express sound and clear views of political subjects. Webster used to say that he did business all the better for having taken his father's horse to water, before he went to college; and Clay boasted of his manual toil as one of the chief preparations of his statesmanship. Chosen from among the people, the great officers of Government know how to address the popular mind, and the popular mind in America, when dispassionate, is a mind of high order."

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRINTING PRESS.—The Potteries (N. J.) Guardian describes an important improvement of the press, recently invented by Mr. D. Baldwin, of Godwinville, called the Press Feeder, and designed to supply the press with blank sheets. The model is a self-operative one, and takes up one sheet at a time, at the surprising rate of 7,000 per hour. The manner of taking hold of the paper is truly ingenious, and works with the greatest simplicity. The apparatus consists of a horizontal tube, to which are joined several small vertical ones; the whole, thus arranged, are given reciprocating motion from the pile of paper to the main cylinder of the press. Connected with these tubes is an air-pump to exhaust them of the air they contain. As the tubes are made to pass over the pile of paper, the pump in its turn exhausts the main tube, and the air immediately rushing in at the lower end of the smaller tubes to supply the vacuum thus formed, draws with it the top sheet of the pile, which, by the external pressure of the atmosphere, is held permanently against the face of the small vertical tubes. The sheet, thus secured, is drawn forward to the cylinder, when the pump is reversed and the sheet of paper is discharged where it receives the impression. The tubes immediately return to their former position for another sheet, and in succession till the whole pile of paper is worked off. This invention bids fair to dispense with a large amount of manual labor, and strongly recommends itself, from great simplicity and certainty in its working parts.

NEW RAILROAD BRAKE.—Capt. Sylvanus Bennett exhibited on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 26, at Woodruff's office, No. 63 Wall street, New York, a working model of a new plan for stopping cars, operating without brakemen, and wholly at the will of the Engineer, by which the brakes can be applied to every wheel in the same space of time now required to send the alarm to brakemen on the cars by the whistle. Capt. Bennett thinks that he can stop a heavy train of cars going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour in a space of about one hundred feet; and going at forty miles an hour, in a space of three hundred feet. The principle is very simple. The brakes are applied to the whole train by merely stopping the engine, or by turning the little hand-wheel on the end of any one car. Two cars braked together by any cause will apply the brakes to both. A rod which is coupled with the cars runs under the whole train, which, being shored back, drives a wedge under the rim of the brake wheels, which close a band upon the outer edge of the wheel two-thirds of its circumference. The act of starting the engine relieves the brakes of all the cars instantly. There is also a very simple arrangement for throwing the brakes out of gear when it is necessary to back, still leaving them to be applied by hand just as well with that motion as a forward one. Upon horse-cars it can be so arranged that the stopping of the team will put the brakes hand down in an instant.

CAUSES OF CRIME.—Of 240 convicts confined in the Tennessee Penitentiary, 38 were temperate before sentence, and 202 intemperate; and 127 were drunk when they committed crime. There are 43 whose fathers were temperate, 197 whose fathers were intemperate, of whom 72 were common drunkards. There are three who have had a classical education, seven of a common English education, 105 who can read and write, 68 who can read only, and 83 who can neither read nor write. These statistics show clearly that intemperance and the want of education are the two most fruitful sources of crime.

HOW TO WEAR SPECTACLES.—The following is copied from a "Treatise on the Eye," by Mr. West, an eminent optician:—

"In the proper use of spectacles, there is no circumstance of more importance than their position on the head. They should be worn so that the glasses may come as close to the eyes as possible, without touching the eyelashes. They should also be placed so that the glasses may be parallel to the paper when the head is in an easy position. To accomplish this, let the sides of the spectacles bear on the head about midway between the top of it and the ear; the eyes will then look directly through the glasses to the paper, and make the most advantageous use of them, instead of looking obliquely through them to the paper, as spectacles are usually worn, with their bows in contact with the ear in which position they produce a distorted image on the retina. The sides of the spectacles should also be placed at an equal height upon the head."

Now and Then.—In 1741 a Boston newspaper contained the following advertisement:

"To be sold by the printer of this paper, the very best Negro Woman in this town, who has had the small pox and the measles; is as hearty as a horse, as brisk as a bird, and will work like a beaver."

To be sold by the printer of this paper, a Negro Man, about 30 years old, who can do both town and country business very well, but will suit the country best, where they have not so many dram-shops as we have in Boston. He has worked at the printing business 16 or 18 years; can handle axe, saw, spade, hoe, or other implement of industry, as well as most men, and values himself and is valued by others, for his skill in cookery."

Times have changed. The "Old Bay State" has long since ejected the sin of slavery. Boston has become the hot-bed of abolitionism.

MASSACHUSETTS OXEN.—At the Western Hampshire Agricultural Fair, there were 50 yoke of oxen exhibited, the average weight of which was 2,694 pounds to the pair. The following figures show the separate weights of pairs: Daniel Monson, 4,600, 4,290, 3,880, 3,450, 3,120; Seth Bush, 4,500, 4,090, 3,810, 3,740, 3,630, 3,420; George Taylor, 4,120, 3,990; Charles Fowler, 4,500, 3,850, 3,880, 3,690, 3,530, 3,200; William Noble, 3,800, 3,450, 3,770, 3,070; Henshaw Taylor, 3,690, 3,680, 3,160, 3,540, 3,350, 3,940; Luke Bush, 3,850, 3,190; George H. Mosely, 3,750, 3,610, 3,440; Elijah Owen, 3,450, 3,350, 3,400, 3,230; Wm. Squier, 3,350; Roswell King, 3,230; Town of Westfield, 3,280; Elijah Sibley, 4,000; West Springfield, 3,100; Almer Moore, 3,800, 3,390, 3,190, Montgomery; Oliver Moore, 3,380, 3,180, &c.; Moses Moore, 3,380, &c.; Wm. Herrick, 3,280, &c.; O. Moore, 3,230, &c. One pair not embraced in the above, by Mr. Luke Bush, estimated at 5,000 pounds.

THE SWEARING ROOM.—The Baltimore Sun says: "A day or two since, a gentleman dressed man, and having all the appearance of one of our most respectable hotels, and perhaps by way of showing his consequence, strutted about the room, asking questions, and interlarding his language with any amount of oaths, especially annoying to the landlord and several other persons present. The landlord at last went to him, and quietly calling him aside, told him that the language he was using was exceedingly disagreeable in that place; further, that there was a private room, particularly fitted up, which was called the 'swearing room,' and if he would only go there he might swear to his heart's content. The stranger took the rebuke kindly, and no more swearing was heard from his lips at that time."

VARIETY.

Since the discovery of gold in California, six hundred ships have gone round Cape Horn into the Pacific, which have not returned. Some were broken up at San Francisco, and some found employment in the Pacific. The abstraction of this large fleet from the Atlantic Ocean, is one of the causes of the activity which has prevailed in ship yards during the last few years.

In connection with the death of Arago, it has been noted as a singular fact, that not a single member of the Provisional Government was present at the funeral of their colleague. Lamartine, Dupont and Garnier Pages were absent from Paris; Ledra Rollin, Louis Blanc and Proudhon are in exile; Albert is in a political prison, and Marrast is dead.

It is stated that the number upon whom the title of D.D. has been conferred by the American Colleges this past year, is ninety-eight, Bishop Davis, of South Carolina, having received it from two different sources. The number blessed with the LL. D. is fifty-one, President Pierce, Governor Clifford of Massachusetts, and Judge Campbell of the Supreme Court, being thrice blessed.

The proprietors of the Cumberland Iron Works, on Cumberland River, Tennessee, have engaged the services of twenty Chinese coolies, as iron workers. They are expected to arrive shortly at Cincinnati, from whence they will be forwarded to their destination. It is said that the Chinese are very expert in working iron.

If we work on marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble to the dust. But if we work upon immortal minds—if we imbue them with high principles, with the fear of God and of their fellow-men, we engrave on those tablets something which no time can efface, but which will brighten to all eternity.

London extends over an area of seventy-eight thousand and twenty-nine acres, or one hundred and twenty-two square miles; and the number of its inhabitants, rapidly increasing, was two millions three hundred and sixty-two thousand two hundred and thirty-six, on the day of the last census.

Harmless mirth is the best cordial against the consumption of the spirit; wherefore, jesting is not unlawful, if it trespasseth not in quantity, quality, or season.

There's a secret drawer in every heart, as there is in every clock, if we only know how to touch the spring of it.

The nerve that never relaxes, the eye that never blanches, the thought that never wanders—these are the masters of victory.

Cromwell did not "wait to strike till the iron was hot, but made it hot by striking." A lesson of perseverance.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Sabbath bells manufacture and keep constant. By no hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Platoon bells. These bells are made with the pattern iron yokes with no rivets, and are found to be around as close as the clapper will strike, in a place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron castings. As the Foundry shows more first class and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warranty that if Church bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast with no charge. The tone of all bells is warranted. Nearly 5000 bells have been cast and sold from the Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs for the best bells for churches and parishes of towns. We pay particular attention to getting up bells for churches, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroad running in every direction. As this is the largest establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest stock of bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can ring a bell in any of the States. Old bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compensators, &c., constantly on hand. Address: A. MENDEL'S SONS, West Troy, N. Y.

American Sabbath Tract Society's Publications.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its post-office, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

No. 1.—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment into the consideration of the Christian Public. 28 pp.

No. 2.—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 32 pp.

No. 3.—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 21 pp.

No. 4.—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 32 pp.

No. 5.—A Christian's Appeal to the Old and New Testaments. 16 pp.

No. 6.—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in one week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.

No. 7.—Thirty-six Plain Questions concerning the main points in the Controversy: A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatarian; Canterbury, Colo. 8 pp.

No. 8.—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.

No. 9.—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition. 4 pp.

No. 10.—The True Sabbath: A Word and Objection. 16 pp.

No. 11.—Beligious Liberty Examined by Legislative enactments. 16 pp.

No. 12.—Moral of the True Sabbath. 8 pp.

No. 13.—The Bible Sabbath. 34 pp.

No. 14.—Obeying Obedience. 4 pp.

No. 15.—An Appeal for the Restoration of the Bible Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists, from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 42 pp.

The Society has also published the following which to which attention is invited:—

A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward as in the Fourth Commandment, by George Canlow. (The printed in London, in 1784; reprinted at Springfield, Ct., in 1802; now republished in a revised form 168 pp.)

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stearns. First printed in London, in 1834. 48 pp. A vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Minister of the Reformed "Presbyterian" Church. 64 pp.

Also, a periodical sheet, quarto, The Sabbath Tract case. Price $1.00 per hundred.

The series of fifteen tracts, together with Edward Stearns' "Royal Law Contended for," and J. W. Morton's "Vindication of the True Sabbath," may be had in a bound volume. Price 35 cents.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the price of 15 cents for one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. UTTEN, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Soc's Publications.

The Sabbath Recorder, Published Weekly.

Terms—$2.00 per annum, in advance.

The Sabbath Recorder is devoted to the exposition and vindication of the views and movements of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. It aims to present correct views of the Sabbath, and to show that it is the same time that it argues obedience to the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Its columns are open to the advocacy of all reformatory measures which seem likely to improve the condition of society, diffuse knowledge, reclaim the imbecile, and subvert the enslaved. In its Literary and Intelligence Departments, care is taken to furnish matter adapted to the wants and tastes of readers, as well as to the religious and family newspaper, it is intended that the Recorder shall rank among the best.

The Sabbath-School Visitor.

Published Monthly.

Terms per annum—Fifty cents in advance. One copy to one address. 12 copies to one address. 25 copies to one address. 50 copies to one address. 100 copies to one address. 250 copies to one address. 500 copies to one address. 1000 copies to one address. 2500 copies to one address. 5000 copies to one address. 10000 copies to one address. 25000 copies to one address. 50000 copies to one address. 100000 copies to one address. 250000 copies to one address. 500000 copies to one address. 1000000 copies to one address. 2500000 copies to one address. 5000000 copies to one address. 10000000 copies to one address. 25000000 copies to one address. 50000000 copies to one address. 100000000 copies to one address. 250000000 copies to one address. 500000000 copies to one address. 1000000000 copies to one address. 2500000000 copies to one address. 5000000000 copies to one address. 10000000000 copies to one address. 25000000000 copies to one address. 50000000000 copies to one address. 100000000000 copies to one address. 250000000000 copies to one address. 500000000000 copies to one address. 1000000000000 copies to one address. 2500000000000 copies to one address. 5000000000000 copies to one address. 10000000000000 copies to one address. 25000000000000 copies to one address. 50000000000000 copies to one address. 100000000000000 copies to one address. 250000000000000 copies to one address. 500000000000000 copies to one address. 1000000000000000 copies to one address. 2500000000000000 copies to one address. 5000000000000000 copies to one address. 10000000000000000 copies to one address. 25000000000000000 copies to one address. 50000000000000000 copies to one address. 100000000000000000 copies to one address. 250000000000000000 copies to one address. 500000000000000000 copies to one address. 1000000000000000000 copies to one address. 2500000000000000000 copies to one address. 500000000000000

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOS. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. X.—NO. 27.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 15, 1853.

WHOLE NO. 495.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Illustrations of the State and of the Honor of the Republic.

The interest with which the people of the Republic anticipate the assembling of Congress, and the fulfillment, on that occasion, of the duty imposed upon a new President, is one of the best evidences of their capacity to realize the hopes of the founders of a political system, at once complex and symmetrical. While the different branches of the Government are, to a certain extent, independent of each other, the duties of all, alike, have direct reference to the source of power. Fortunately, under this system, no man is so high, and none so humble, in the scale of public station, as to escape from the scrutiny, or to be exempt from the responsibility, which all official functions imply.

Upon the justice and intelligence of the masses, in a Government thus organized, is the sole reliance of the Confederacy, and the only security for honest and correct decisions in its interests, against the usurpations and encroachments of power on one hand, and the assaults of personal ambition on the other.

The interest, of which I have spoken, is inseparable from an inquiring, self-governing community, but stimulated, doubtless, at the present time, by the unsettled condition of our relations with several foreign powers; by the new obligations resulting from a sudden extension of the field of enterprise; by the spirit with which that field has been entered, and the amazing energy with which its resources for meeting the demands of humanity have been developed.

Although disease, scouring at one time the characteristics of a wide-spread and devastating pestilence, has left its sad traces upon some portions of our country, we have still the most abundant cause for reverent thankfulness to God for an accumulation of signal mercies showered upon us as a Nation. It is well that a consciousness of rapid advancement and increasing strength be habitually associated with an abiding sense of dependence upon Him who holds in his hands the destiny of men and of Nations.

Recognizing the wisdom of the broad principle of absolute religious toleration proclaimed in our fundamental law, and rejoicing in the benign influence which it has exerted upon our social and political condition, I should shrink from a clear duty, did I fail to express my deepest conviction, that we can place no secure reliance upon any apparent progress, if it be not sustained by national unity, resting upon the great truths all affirmed in the Declaration of Independence. The main of our sorrow for the affliction and suffering, it has been conceding to see how promptly disaster made true neighbors of districts and cities separated widely from each other, and cheering to watch the strength of that common bond of brotherhood, which unites all hearts, in all parts of this Union, when danger threatens from abroad, or calamity impends over us at home.

Our diplomatic relations with foreign powers have undergone no essential change since the adjournment of the last Congress. With some of these questions of a disturbing character still pending, but there are good reasons to believe that these may all be amicably adjusted.

For some years past, Great Britain has not contracted the first article of the Convention of the 20th of April, 1818, in regard to the fisheries off the north-eastern coast, as to exclude our citizens from some of the fishing grounds, to which they freely resorted for nearly a quarter of a century subsequent to the date of that treaty. The United States have never acquiesced in this construction, but have always claimed for their fishermen all the rights which they had so long enjoyed without molestation. With a view to remove all difficulties on the subject, to extend the rights of our fishermen beyond the limits fixed by the Convention of 1818, and to regulate trade between the United States and the British North American Provinces, a negotiation has been opened, with a fair prospect of a favorable result. To protect our fishermen in the enjoyment of their rights, and prevent collision between them and British fishermen, I deemed it expedient to station a naval force in that quarter during the fishing season.

Embarrassing questions have also arisen between the two Governments in regard to Central America. Great Britain has proposed to settle them by an amicable arrangement, and our Minister at London is instructed to enter into negotiations on that subject.

A Commission for adjusting the claims of our citizens against Great Britain, and those of British subjects against the United States, organized under the Convention of the 8th of February last, is now sitting in London for the transaction of business.

It is in many respects desirable that the boundary line between the United States and the British Provinces in the north-west, as designated in the Convention of the 14th of June, 1846, and especially that part which separates the Territory of Washington from the British possessions on the north, should be traced and marked. I therefore present the subject to your notice.

With France our relations continue on the most friendly footing. The extensive commerce between the United States and that country, might, it is conceived, be released from some unnecessary restrictions, to the mutual advantage of both parties. With a view to this object, some progress has been made in negotiating a treaty of commerce and navigation.

Independently of our valuable trade with Spain, we have important political relations with her, growing out of our neighborhood to the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. I am happy to announce, that since the last Congress no attempts have been made, by unauthorized agencies within the United States, against either of these Colonies. Should any movement be manifested within our limits, all the means at my command will be tigiously exerted to repress it. Several annoying occurrences have taken place at Havana, or in the vicinity of the island of Cuba, between our citizens and the Spanish authorities. Considering the proximity of that island to our shores—lying as it does, in the track of trade between some of our principal cities—and the suspicious vigilance with which foreign intercourse, particularly that with the United States, is there guarded, a repetition of such occurrences may well be apprehended. As no diplomatic intercourse is allowed between our Consul at Havana and the Captain-General of Cuba, ready explanations cannot be made, or prompt redress afforded, where injury has resulted. All complaint on the part of our citizens, under the present arrangement, must be, in the first place, presented to this Government, and then referred to Spain. Spain again refers it to her local authorities in Cuba for investigation, and postpones an answer till she has heard from those authorities. To avoid these irritating and vexatious delays, a proposition has been made to provide for a direct appeal for redress to the Captain-General by our Consul, in behalf of our injured fellow-citizens. Hitherto, the Government of Spain has declined to enter into any such arrangement. This course on her part is deeply regretted; for, without some arrangement of this kind, the good understanding between the two countries may be exposed to occasional interruption. Our Minister at Madrid is instructed to renew the proposition, and to press it again upon the consideration of her Catholic Majesty's Government.

For several years Spain has been calling the attention of this Government to a claim for losses, by some of her subjects, in the case of the schooner Amistad. This claim is believed to rest on the obligations imposed by our existing treaty with that country. Its justice was admitted, in our diplomatic correspondence with the Spanish Government, as early as March, 1847, and one of my predecessors, in his annual Message of that year, recommended that provision should be made for its payment. In January last it was again submitted to Congress by the Executive. It has received a favorable consideration by Committees of both branches, but as yet there has been no final action upon it. I conceive that good faith requires its prompt adjustment, and I present it to your early and favorable consideration.

Martin Koszta, a Hungarian by birth, came to this country in 1850, and declared his intention, in due form of law, to become a citizen of the United States. After remaining here nearly two years, he visited Turkey. While at Smyrna, he was forcibly seized, taken on board an Austrian brig of war, then lying in the harbor of that place, and there confined in irons, with the avowed design to take him into the dominions of Austria. Our Consul at Smyrna and Legation at Constantinople implored for his release, but their efforts were ineffectual. While thus imprisoned, Commander Ingraham, with the United States ship of war St. Louis, arrived at Smyrna, and, after inquiring into the circumstances of the case, came to the conclusion that Koszta was entitled to the protection of this Government, and took energetic and prompt measures for his release. Under an arrangement between the agents of the United States and of Austria, he was transferred to the custody of the French Consul-General, at Smyrna, there to remain until he should be disposed of by the mutual agreement of the Councils of the respective Governments at that place. Pursuant to that agreement he has been released and is now in the United States. The Emperor of Austria has made the conduct of our officers who took part in this transaction a subject of grave complaint. Regarding Koszta as still his subject, and claiming a right to seize him within the limits of the Turkish Empire, he has demanded of this Government its consent to the surrender of the prisoner, a disavowal of the acts of its agents, and satisfaction for the alleged outrage. After a careful consideration of the case, I came to the conclusion that Koszta was seized without legal authority at Smyrna; that he was wrongfully detained on board of the Austrian brig of war; that, at the time of his seizure, he was clothed with the nationality of the United States; and that the acts of our officers, under the circumstances of the case, were justifiable, and their conduct has been fully approved by me, and a compliance with the several demands of the Emperor of Austria has been declined.

For a more full account of this transaction and my views in regard to it, I refer to the correspondence between the Charge d'Affaires of Austria and the Secretary of State, which is herewith transmitted. The principles and policy, therein maintained on the part of the United States, will, wherever a proper occasion occurs, be applied and enforced.

The condition of China, at this time, renders it probable that some important changes will occur in that vast Empire, which will lead to a more unrestricted intercourse with it. The Commissioner to that country, who has been recently appointed, is instructed to avail himself of all occasions to open and extend our commercial relations, not only with the Empire of China, but with other Asiatic nations.

In 1852, an expedition was sent to Japan, under the command of Commodore Perry, for the purpose of opening commercial intercourse with that island. Intelligence has been received of his arrival there, and of his having made known to the Emperor of Japan the object of his visit; but it is not yet ascertained how far the Emperor will be disposed to abandon his restrictive policy, and open that populous country to a commercial intercourse with the United States.

It has been my earnest desire to maintain friendly intercourse with the Governments upon this continent, and to aid them in preserving good understanding among themselves. With Mexico, a dispute has arisen as to the true boundary line between our territory of New Mexico and the Mexican State of Chihuahua. A former Commissioner of the United States, employed in running that line pursuant to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, made a serious mistake in determining the initial point on the Rio Grande; but, instead of his decision was clearly a departure from the directions for tracing the boundary contained in that treaty, and was not concurred in by a surveyor appointed on the part of the United States, whose concurrence was necessary to give validity to that decision, this Government is not concluded thereby; but that of Mexico takes a different view of the subject.

There are also other questions of considerable magnitude pending between the two Republics. Our Minister in Mexico has ample instructions to adjust them. Negotiations have been opened, but sufficient progress has not been made therein to enable me to speak of the probable result. Impressed with the importance of maintaining amicable relations with that Republic, and yielding with liberality to her just claims, it is reasonable to expect that an arrangement mutually satisfactory to both countries may be concluded, and a lasting friendship between them confirmed and perpetuated.

Congress having provided for a full mission to the States of Central America, a minister was sent thither in July last. As yet he has had time to visit only one of these States, (Nicaragua,) where he was received in the most friendly manner. It is hoped that his presence, and good offices will have a benign effect in composing the dissensions which prevail among them, and in establishing still more intimate and friendly relations between them respectively, and between each of them and the United States.

Considering the vast regions of this continent, and the number of States which would be made accessible by the free navigation of the river Amazon, particular attention has been given to the subject. Brazil, through whose territories it passes into the ocean, has hitherto persisted in a policy so restrictive, in regard to the use of this river, as to obstruct, and nearly exclude, foreign commercial intercourse with the States which lie upon its tributaries and upper branches. Our minister to that country is instructed to obtain a relaxation of that policy, and to use his efforts to induce the Brazilian Government to open to common use, under proper safeguards, this great natural highway for international trade. Several of the South American States are deeply interested in this attempt to secure the free navigation of the Amazon, and it is reasonable to expect their cooperation in the measure. As the advantages of free commercial intercourse among nations are better understood, more liberal views are generally entertained as to the common rights of all to the free use of those means which nature has provided for international communication. To these more liberal and enlightened views, it is hoped that Brazil will conform her policy, and remove all unnecessary restrictions upon the free use of a river, which traverses so many States, and so large a part of the continent. I am happy to inform you that the Republic of Paraguay and the Argentine Confederation have yielded to the liberal policy still retained by Brazil, in regard to the navigable rivers within their respective territories. Treaties, embracing this subject among others, have been negotiated with these Governments, which will be submitted to the Senate at the present session.

A new branch of commerce, important to the agricultural interests of the United States, has, within a few years past, been opened with Peru. Notwithstanding the innumerable deposits of guano upon the islands of that country, considerable difficulties are experienced in obtaining the requisite supply. Measures have been taken to remove these difficulties, and to secure a more abundant importation of the article. Unfortunately, there has been a serious collision between our citizens, who have resorted to the Chincha Islands for it, and the Peruvian authorities stationed there. Redress for the outrages, committed by the latter, was promptly demanded by our Minister at Lima. This subject is now under consideration, and there is reason to believe that Peru is disposed to offer adequate indemnity to the aggrieved parties. We are thus not only at peace with all foreign countries, but in regard to political affairs, are exempt from any cause of serious disquietude in our domestic relations.

The controversies, which have agitated the country heretofore, are passing away with the causes which produced them and the passions which they had awakened, or, if any trace of them remains, it may be reasonably hoped that it will only be perceived in the zealous rivalry of all good citizens to testify their respect for the rights of the States, their devotion to the Union, and their common determination that each one of the States, its institutions, its welfare, and its domestic peace shall be held alike secure under the sacredegis of the Constitution.

This new league of amity and of mutual confidence and support into which the people of the Republic have entered, happily affords inducement and opportunity for the adoption of a more comprehensive and unembarrassed line of policy and action, as to the great material interests of the country, whether regarded in themselves or in connection with the powers of the civilized world.

The United States have continued gradually and steadily to expand, through acquisitions of territory, which, how much sooner some of them may have been questioned, are now universally seen and admitted to have been wise in policy, just in character, and a great element in the advancement of our country, and, with it, of the human race, in freedom, in prosperity, and in happiness. The thirteen States have grown to be thirty-one, with relations reaching to Europe on the one side, and on the other to the distant realms of Asia.

I am deeply sensible of the immense responsibility which the present magnitude of the Republic, and the diversity and multiplicity of its interests, devolves upon me; the alleviation of which, so far as relates to the immediate conduct of the public business is, first, in my reliance on the wisdom and patriotism of the two Houses of Congress; and, secondly, in the directions afforded me by the principles of public policy, affirmed by our fathers at the epoch of 1788, sanctioned by long experience, and consecrated anew by the overwhelming voice of this people of the United States.

Recurring to these principles, which constitute the organic basis of union, we perceive that, vast as are the functions and duties of the Federal Government, vested in, or entrusted to its three great departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, yet the substantive power, the popular force, and the large capacities for social and material development, exist in the respective States, which, all being of themselves well constituted republics, as they proceeded, so they alone are capable of maintaining and perpetuating the American Union. The Federal Government has its appropriate line of action in the specific and limited powers conferred on it by the Constitution, chiefly as to those things in which the States have a common interest, in their relations to one another, and to foreign governments; while the great mass of interests which belong to cultivated men, the ordinary business of life, the springs of industry, all the diversified personal and domestic affairs of society, rest securely upon the general reserved powers of the people of the several States. There is the effective Democracy of the nation, and there the vital essence of its being and its greatness.

Of the practical consequences which flow from the nature of the Federal Government, the primary one is the duty of administering with integrity and fidelity the high trust reposed in it by the Constitution, especially in the application of the Public Funds, and in the taxation from the people, and appropriated to specific objects by Congress. Happily I have no occasion to suggest any radical changes in the financial policy of the Government. Ours is almost, if not absolutely, the solitary power of Christendom having a surplus revenue, drawn immediately from imposts on commerce, and therefore measured by the spontaneous enterprise and national prosperity of the country, with such indirect relation to agriculture, manufactures, and the products of the earth and sea, as to violate no constitutional doctrine, and yet vigorously promote the general welfare. Neither as to the sources of the public revenue, nor as to the manner of keeping and managing it, does any grave controversy now prevail, there being a general acquiescence in the wisdom of the present system.

The Report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit in detail, the state of the public finances, and the condition of the various branches of the public service administered by that department of the Government.

The revenue of the country, levied almost insensibly to the tax payer, goes on from year to year increasing beyond either the interests or the prospective wants of the Government.

At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, there remained in the Treasury a balance of fourteen million six hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars. The public revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, amounted to fifty-eight million nine hundred and thirty-three thousand eight hundred and sixty-four dollars from customs, and to two million four hundred and five thousand seven hundred and eight dollars from public lands and other miscellaneous sources, amounting together to sixty-one million three hundred and thirty-three thousand five hundred and seventy-four dollars; while the public expenditures for the same period, exclusive of payments on account of the public debt, amounted to forty-three million five hundred and fifty-five thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars; leaving a balance of thirty-two million four hundred and twenty-five thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars of receipts above expenditures.

This fact of increasing surplus in the Treasury, because the subject of anxious consideration at a very early period of my Administration, and the path of duty in regard to it seemed to me obvious and clear, namely first, to apply the surplus revenue to the discharge of the Public Debt, so far as it could judiciously be done; and, secondly, to devise means for the gradual reduction of the revenue to the standard of the public exigencies.

Of these objects, the first has been in the course of accomplishment, in a manner and to a degree highly satisfactory. The amount of the Public Debt, of all classes, was, on the 1st of March, 1853, sixty-nine million one hundred and ninety thousand and thirty-seven dollars; payments on account of which have been made, since that period, to the amount of twelve million seven hundred and three thousand three hundred and twenty-nine dollars, leaving unpaid, and in the continuous course of liquidation, the sum of fifty-six million four hundred and eighty-six thousand seven hundred and eight dollars. These payments, although made at the market price of the respective classes of stocks, have been effected readily, and to the general advantage of the Treasury, and have at the same time proved of signal utility in the relief they have afforded to the money market, and to the industrial and commercial pursuits of the country.

The second of the above-mentioned objects, that of the reduction of the Tariff is of great importance, and the plan suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is to reduce the duties on certain articles, and to add to the free list many articles now taxed, and especially such as enter into manufactures, and are not largely, or at all, produced in the country, is commended to your candid and careful consideration.

You will find in the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, also, abundant proof of the entire adequacy of the present fiscal system to meet all the requirements of the public service, and that, while properly administered, it operates to the advantage of the community in ordinary business relations.

I respectfully ask your attention to sundry suggestions of improvements in the settlement of accounts, especially as regards the large sums of outstanding arrears due to the Government, and of other reforms in the administrative action of its department, which are indicated by the Secretary; as also to the progress made in the construction of Marine Hospitals, Custom Houses, and of a new Mint in California and Assay Office in the City of New York, heretofore provided for by Congress; and also to the eminently successful progress of the Coast Survey, and of the Light-House Board.

Among the objects meriting your attention will be important recommendations from the Secretaries of War and Navy. I am fully satisfied that the Navy of the United States is not in a condition of strength and efficiency commensurate with the magnitude of our commercial and other interests; and commend to your special attention the suggestions on this subject, made by the Secretary of the Navy. I respectfully submit that the Army, which, under our system, must always be regarded with the highest interest, as a nucleus around which the volunteer forces of the nation gather in the hour of danger, requires augmentation, or modification, to adapt it to the present extended limits and frontier relations of the country, and the condition of the Indian tribes in the interior of the continent; the necessity of which will appear in the communications of the Secretaries of War and the Interior.

In the administration of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, the gross expenditures were seven million nine hundred and eighty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars; and the gross receipts, during the same period, five million nine hundred and forty-two thousand seven hundred and thirty-four dollars; showing that the current revenue failed to meet the current expenses of the department by the sum of two million four hundred and thirty-eight dollars. The causes which, under the present postal system and laws, led inevitably to this result, are fully explained by the Report of the Postmaster-General; one great cause being the enormous rates the department has been compelled to pay for mail service rendered by Railroad Companies.

The exhibit in the Report of the Postmaster-General of the income and expenditures by mail steamers will be found peculiarly interesting, and of a character to demand the immediate action of Congress.

Numerous and flagrant frauds upon the Pension Bureau have been brought to light within the past year, and, in some instances, merited punishments inflicted; but, unfortunately, in others, guilty parties have escaped, not through the want of sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, but in consequence of the provisions of limitation in the existing laws.

From the nature of these claims, the remoteness of the tribunals to pass upon them, and the mode in which the proof is, of necessity, furnished, temptations to crime have been greatly stimulated by the obvious difficulties of detection. The defects in the law in this respect are apparent, and it is my duty to call to the notice of Congress, and to the public mind, that your early action relating to it is most desirable.

During the last fiscal year, nine million eight hundred and sixteen thousand four hundred and eleven acres of the public lands have been surveyed, and ten million three hundred and sixty-three thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine acres brought into market. Within the same period the sales by public purchase and private entry amounted to one million eighty-three thousand four hundred and ninety-five acres; located under military bounty land warrants, six million one hundred and forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty acres; located under other certificates, nine thousand four hundred and twenty-seven acres; sold to the State as swamp lands, sixteen million six hundred and eighty-four thousand two hundred and fifty-three acres; selected for railroad and other objects, under acts of Congress, one million four hundred and twenty-seven thousand four hundred and fifty-seven acres. Total amount of lands disposed of, within the fiscal year, twenty-five million three hundred and forty-six thousand nine hundred and ninety-two acres—which is an increase in quantity sold and located under land warrants and grants, of twelve million two hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven acres over the fiscal year immediately preceding. The quantity of land sold during the second and third quarters of 1852, was three hundred and thirty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-one acres. The amount received therefor was six hundred and twenty-three thousand six hundred and eighty-seven dollars. The quantity sold the second and third quarters of the year 1853, was one million four hundred and nine thousand one hundred and sixteen acres; and the amount received therefor, two million two hundred and twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars.

The whole number of land warrants issued under existing laws, prior to the 30th of September last, was two hundred and sixty-six thousand and forty-two; of which there were outstanding, at that date, sixty-six thousand one hundred and forty-seven. The quantity of land required to satisfy these outstanding warrants is four million seven hundred and seventy-eight thousand one hundred and twenty acres.

Warrants have been issued to 30th of September last, under the act of 11th February, 1847, calling for twelve million eight hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and eighty acres; under acts of September 28, 1850, and March 22, 1852, calling for twelve million five hundred and five thousand three hundred and sixty acres—making a total of twenty-five million three hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred and forty acres.

It is believed that experience has verified the wisdom and justice of the present system, with regard to the public domain, in most essential particulars.

You will perceive, from the Report of the Secretary of the Interior, that opinions, which have often been expressed in relation to the operation of the land system, as not being a source of revenue to the Federal Treasury, were erroneous. The net profits from the sale of the public lands to June 30, 1853, amounted to the sum of fifty-three million two hundred and eighty-nine thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars.

I recommend the extension of the land system over the Territories of Utah and New Mexico, with such modifications as their peculiarities may require.

Regarding our public domain as chiefly valuable to provide homes for the industrious and enterprising, I am not prepared to recommend any essential change in the land system, except by modifications in favor of the actual settler, and an extension of the preemption principle in certain cases, for reasons and on grounds which will be fully developed in the reports to be laid before you.

Congress, representing the proprietors of the territorial domain, and charged especially with power to dispose of territory belonging to the United States, has, for a long course of years, beginning with the administration of Mr. Jefferson, exercised the power to construct roads within the Territories; and there are so many and obvious distinctions between this exercise of power and that of making roads within the States, that the former has never been considered subject to such objections as apply to the latter, and such may now be considered the settled construction of the power of the Federal Government upon the subject.

Numerous applications have been, and no doubt will continue to be made for grants of land, in aid of the construction of railways. It is not believed to be within the intent and meaning of the Constitution, that the power to dispose of the public domain should be used otherwise than might be expected from a prudent proprietor, and, therefore, that grants of land in aid of the construction of roads should be restricted to cases where it would be for the interest of a proprietor, under like circumstances, to contribute to the construction of these works. For the practical operation of such grants thus far, in advancing the interests of the States in which the works are located, and at the same time the substantial interests of all the other States by enhancing the value and promoting the rapid sale of the public domain, I refer you to the Report of the Secretary of the Interior. A careful examination, however, will show that this experience is the result of a just discrimination, and will be far from affording encouragement to a reckless or indiscriminate extension of the principle.

I commend to your favorable consideration the men of genius of our country, who, by their inventions and discoveries in science and art, have contributed largely to the improvements of the age, without, in many instances, securing for themselves anything like an adequate reward. For any interesting details upon this subject I refer you to the appropriate Reports, and especially urge upon you early attention the apparently slight, but really important modifications of existing laws therein suggested.

The liberal spirit which has so long marked the action of Congress in relation to the District of Columbia, will, I have no doubt, continue to be manifested.

The erection of an asylum for the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy of the United States, has been somewhat retarded; but full preparation for the reception of patients, before the return of another winter, is anticipated; and there is the best reason to believe, from the plan and contemplated arrangements which have been devised, with the large experience furnished within the last few years in relation to the nature and treatment of the disease, that it will prove an asylum indeed to this most helpless and afflicted class of sufferers, and stand as a noble monument of wisdom and mercy.

Under the acts of Congress of Aug. 31, 1852, and of March 2, 1853, designed to secure for the city of Washington and Georgetown an abundant supply of good and wholesome water, it became my duty to examine the report and plans of the engineer who had charge of the surveys under the act first named. The best, if not the only plan, calculated to secure permanently the object sought, was that which contemplated taking the water from the Great Falls of the Potomac, and, consequently, I gave it my approval.

For the progress and present condition of this important work, and for its demands, so far as appropriations are concerned, I refer you to the Report of the Secretary of War.

The present judicial system of the United States has only been in operation for a long period of 1852 and has, in its general theory and spirit of its details, become so familiar to the country, and acquired so entirely the public confidence, that if modified in any respect, it should only be in those particulars which may adapt it to the increased extent, population, and legal business of the United States. In this relation, the organization of the Courts is now so completely inadequate to the duties to be performed by them; in consequence of which, the States of Florida, Wisconsin, Iowa, Texas, and California, and districts of other States are in effect excluded from the full benefits of the general system, by the functions of the Circuit Court being devolved on the District Judges in all those States, or parts of States.

The spirit of the Constitution and a due regard to justice require that all the States of the Union should be placed on the same footing in regard to the judicial tribunals. I therefore commend to your consideration this important subject, which, in my judgment, demands the speedy action of Congress. I will present to you, if deemed desirable, a plan, which I am prepared to recommend, for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system.

The act of Congress establishing the Smithsonian Institution provided that the President of the United States, and other persons therein designated, should constitute an "establishment" by that name, and that the members should hold annual and special meetings for the supervision of the affairs of the Institution. The organization not having taken place, it seemed to me proper that it should be effected without delay. This has been done, and an occasion was thereby presented for improving the condition of the Institution, and appreciating its successful progress thus far, and

(Continued on Fourth Page.)

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 15, 1853.

GEORGE L. UTTER, & THOMAS B. BROWN, D.D., Editors.
JAMES S. BAKER, D.D., Editor.
T. E. BAKER, D.D., Editor.
J. M. ALLEN, D.D., Editor.

REV. L. J. ROBERTS—A CLOUDY PROSPECT.

The attention of our readers has been called to the progress of the Rev. Mr. Roberts, Baptist missionary in China, in connection with the extraordinary revolution now progressing in that country. They will, doubtless, be glad to know something of the former history of a man thus suddenly rendered conspicuous.

Teacher J. Roberts was a student at the Furman Theological Institute, Edgefield, S. C.; and while there, his mind became exercised upon the subject of Missions. His exercises finally resulted in a conviction, that he was called to preach the word of the Lord in China. Having come to this conclusion, he began to look out for a way and means to go.

In the fall of 1834 a Convention of Western Baptist Churches was held in Cincinnati, the object of which was, among other things, (if we remember rightly,) the promotion of the missionary spirit more extensively among the churches of the Great Valley of the Mississippi. Among the resolutions adopted by that body was one, recommending to the Baptists of the Mississippi Valley to furnish to the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions the means requisite to sustain a Baptist Mission in China.

Mr. Roberts' attention being called to this resolution, he determined at the next meeting of the Convention to offer himself as a candidate for the mission in China. Accordingly, in 1835, he appeared before that body, and submitted a lengthy paper, detailing his exercises upon the subject of missions in general, and upon the proposed mission to China particularly, accompanied with sundry letters of recommendation from various persons and churches in Kentucky, South Carolina, and Mississippi.

The Western Convention was a mere Association of Churches, and could take no action in the case; the case was therefore passed to the Foreign Board, located in Boston, and this body rejected Mr. R.'s application. He had a thousand acres of land in Mississippi, valued then at $6,000. He offered to the Boston Board, or any other Baptist organization, this land as a permanent mission fund, provided they would add $6,000 more to it, and send him to China upon the interest of it.

The extraordinary spirit of speculation which spread over the country about this time, giving a fictitious value to real estate, raised the value of his land to $25,000. He proposed selling it, converting a portion into a mission fund, and the proceeds to be conducted by a Board of Trustees, and going to China as a missionary, sustained by the interest of this fund under the direction of said Trustees. In pursuance of his plan, the Roberts Fund and China Mission Society was organized in the city of Louisville on the 10th of May, 1836, and on the 15th of the same month he was solemnly set apart as a missionary to China, in presence of a large assembly of people. A subscription of over $1,000 for his support was taken on the occasion.

By collection, and loans by Mr. R., a sum sufficient, as was supposed, for outfit, &c., for one year was raised; and he immediately began to prepare for leaving the country on his contemplated mission. He arrived at Mexico in the spring of 1837.

As his land yielded no rent, and under his instructions could not be sold before the spring of 1837, funds for his support had to be raised by contributions from the churches. He had been assured that he could as easily get $20,000 for his land in the spring of 1837, as he could the offered $25,000 in the summer of 1836; and the Board was therefore restricted from selling until the following spring, when the terrible monetary crash came upon the country, and the lands fell beyond the possibility of sale; so that he was left to sustain by the contributions of the churches. But notwithstanding this discouragement, the contributions of his friends and his own energy served to sustain him in China, and to enable him to purchase a lot and build a chapel. About two years afterward, however, he was received as a missionary of the Boston Board, and continued in this relation until about the time of the formation of the Southern Board, when he became a missionary of that body.

The foregoing account we have condensed from an article in the Tennessee Baptist by the Rev. Wm. C. Beck, one of Mr. R.'s earliest friends and supporters. The Baptist speaks of Mr. R. as "one who has sacrificed more, labored more, and suffered more, than any missionary to a foreign field was ever called upon to undergo"—though in what respects he has been such a sufferer, we are not informed. We could wish that his martyr spirit might be evinced in trying to establish the great Chinese Empire in the observance of the Sabbath, whether it were "the day most generally observed throughout Christendom," or not. But what he is on "the any-day system, provided it be the most popular day," (See Mr. Carpenter's Letter in last week's Recorder.)

The any-day system! A system which goes on the supposition, that God has not joined the observance of any one day in particular, but left his people to agree as they best can! A system which blows out the commemorative character of the Sabbath entirely, so that it is neither a memorial of Creation, as it would be, if its observance were restricted to the seventh, nor a memorial of Redemption, as it would be if its observance were restricted to the first day of the week! Yet the very persons who advocate this system, will tell us that we ought to keep Sunday, because the work of Redemption is far greater than that of Creation!

"But, leaving our First-day brethren to get along with their inconsistencies as they best can, we have a word to our own people. Here is a most remarkable disposition of Providence. In the midst of a heathen Empire, and in a part uninhabited by Christian missionaries, springs up a band of reformers. They do declare war against the idolatry of their land, they show their belief in the religion of Jesus Christ, and they are all observers of the Bible Sabbath. Their numbers swell to eighty or a hundred thousand, as they march through the land, and still they are observers of the Bible Sabbath. They establish themselves at Nanking, their leader is declared Emperor, and no one doubts that the three hundred millions of China will soon be subjected to his sway. It seems next to certain, that all these three hundred millions—more than a quarter of the globe's population—will soon acknowledge the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath of the Lord. Messrs. Carpenter and Wardner, who have stood there alone as witnesses for the Sabbath, for the last six years, seem just about to have their hearts gladdened with the change; and the miserably contrived fraud, (we can give it no other name,) by which other missionaries have attempted to palm off the Sunday upon their converts, as if it were the variable seventh day enjoined in the Fourth Commandment, saying nothing to them about any change that has taken place, seems just on the point of being put away forever. The day of the week is now the Sabbath of the Empire; when suddenly the scene changes. The sky that looked so bright, is suddenly clouded. The cap that was lifted to our lips, is dashed from us ere we can take the first draught.

Brethren of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, can you interpret this Providence? Can you tell why God brought the blessing so near, and then suddenly took it away? Lay your hands upon your hearts, and say if it was not because you were in a totally unfit condition to receive such a blessing. Say if it was not because you were so full of the spirit of this world, so faithless, so prayerless, so wanting in readiness to do your duty, that God could not, consistently with his own perfection, bestow the blessing upon you. "Therefore say I unto you, The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof?"

SKETCHES FROM NOTES OF A TOUR THROUGH VIRGINIA AND OHIO.

The Virginia Association was held on the bank of a stream called Meat-house Fork, taking its name, I was told, from the circumstance that "in an early day" some hunters had a gathering point on it, and erected a hut in which to store their game, &c. It is a tributary of what is called Middle-land River. This takes its name from the circumstance that its confluence with the Ohio is opposite the middle one of a group of islands in that river called the Three Brothers. The Church with which the Association was held, takes its name from this River, (Middle-land), and holds its meetings sometimes at West Union, the county seat of Doddridge Co., situated on the river, and sometimes on the Meat-house Fork, near a place called New Milton. The distance between the two points is about eight miles. The members are so scattered that, to avail themselves of the benefits and comforts of frequently meeting together for worship, requires considerable effort. Yet the location of this church is more important, in some respects, than that of any other church in the Association. As the counties in Virginia are not divided into townships, a much larger proportion of business centers in the county seat than elsewhere would, attaching to it a corresponding importance. Indeed, the operation of this arrangement, in many of the counties, is to make it the only town of much consequence in the county. To have an opportunity to bear a part in giving direction to morals and religion in such a locality, may be justly regarded as a high honor; and is a position involving no small responsibility. At this place, also, center the educational interests of our people in Virginia. Here, the Academy which they have undertaken to establish is located. It appears to me, that the future prosperity of our people in this region depends greatly upon the faithful and vigorous occupation of this field. If there is any place that calls more loudly than another for the concentration and vigorous action of all the influence and ability of those who profess to respect God's holy but neglected Sabbath, it is this. And if, for the want of such a concentration of influence, the position to which Providence has invited Sabbath-keepers here is neglected until others come forward and assume it, there are those upon whom a fearful weight of responsibility must fall; for, as if an eye had been directed to the emergency, an amount of talent has been developed here, perhaps superior to that of any other locality occupied by our people in the State.

Before we dispersed from the Association, I fixed West Union as the place, and the 13th of September as the time, of starting for Ohio, and arranged my visit and appointments accordingly. Bro. Jeptha F. Randolph stopped his plough to furnish me a horse, and Sunday morning, Sept. 5th, I set out for Haghe's River. Our company, at first, consisted of nine or ten persons, both men and women, all on horseback; among whom was Elder Asa Bee, pastor of the church on Haghe's River. This place is about twenty-four miles from New Milton, in a south-westerly direction, and is in Ritchie County, and, I believe, about ten miles from Harrieville, the county seat; situated below on the same river. This is comparatively a new settlement; though the church has been organized about twenty years. This church, though small in numbers, and occupying a very retired situation, presents a picture worthy of examination, and in many respects an example worthy of imitation. To them, their fellowship is no mere nominal affair. They hold meetings, besides those for worship, for investigation; in which they discuss all questions of interest, either in principle or practice, making the word of God the standard of authority. They have carried with them into these discussions a desire, not simply to gain a victory, but to arrive at truthful conclusions; and they have never failed to agree, in the end, on any question that has arisen. No one enters into any important business transaction, without the advice and consent of the church; and when, in following such advice, a loss is incurred, they are mutual sharers in sustaining it, in proportion to what each is worth. They publicly announce their purpose never to resort to the civil law for the recovery of debts, yet they seldom lose any thing by that means. They also agree that change of style in dress, &c., shall be by common consent, and on principles of utility.

I remained here one night, preaching in the evening; and the next day started on my return to New Milton. Eld. Lewis Bond, an old minister, who was not able to attend the Association, having heard that I was present, had sent word that he wished me to come to his house and preach, and the appointment had been made for this afternoon, Sept. 6th. He lives not far from the North Fork of Haghe's River, where there once was a church, which has become extinct. I think he was the minister to this church. As my way was principally through forest, without any road, Bro. Asa Bee accompanied me as a guide. The distance is about ten or twelve miles. Though the house stands alone in a small opening in the forest, there were as many present as could be comfortably seated in the room. But few of them, I think, however, were Sabbath-keepers. After enjoying a short social interview with the old man and his family, and partaking of their hospitality, we went home with Bro. John Bee, and spent the night.

The next day, with my host for a guide five or six miles out to a more public road, I returned to New Milton, and thence to Green River Run, where I had an appointment for the evening. This settlement, I should think, is a little north of east from New Milton, on the road to New Salem; not far from midway between them. The people here are mostly connected with the New Salem church. There is a log meeting-house here, in which they sometimes used to worship, which is now nearly or quite neglected. Elder Peter Davis lives here, whose ordination is mentioned in a Ministry Report of E. M. John Green, published since my return, in the Seventh-day Baptist Memorial. He is the minister of the New Salem church. He has reached an advanced age, and feels that his public labors are nearly finished. His life has been laborious. Besides providing for himself and family, with his own hands, he preached much, for many years, not only in all the settlements occupied by our people in the State, but many other places.

After the service, I went home with Eld. Davis, who the next day, Sept. 9th, went with his horse and buggy, and carried me to Lost Creek; going via New Salem, to meet an appointment for me there at 11 o'clock A. M. This church (New Salem) is the oldest in the Association. Its organization dates back one hundred and eight years; though it has not stood here all that time. It was organized on Squam River, New Jersey, in 1745; and some time after, the main body of the church emigrated to Woodbridge, in the south-west part of Pennsylvania. After remaining there a while, they removed some sixty or seventy years since to this place. The meeting-house is an ancient looking structure, of hewed logs. There is a gallery in it, which, however, seems to have fallen into disuse. The gloomy aspect of the house is, perhaps, too true an index to the condition of the church. It is a sad picture, to see a church that has withstood the vicissitudes of more than a century, feebly struggling for existence. Truly "the harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few."

PREMIUM OF FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS FOR A WORK ON PEACE.—The American Tract Society announce that a premium of five hundred dollars from an aged friend is offered to be awarded to the author of the best approved treatise of not less than 300 nor more than 400 pages, on Peace. The character of the work as defined by the donor, must not radical, opposing all war as per se, sinful. It must, moreover, accord, in its sentiments, with evangelical principles. The premium is to be awarded by a committee consisting of Rev. Joseph W. Parker, D.D., of Cambridge, Mass.; Hos. William J. Hubbard of Boston, and Rev. Asa D. Smith, D.D., of New York; and the aged friend has pledged a sum sufficient to perpetuate the circulation of said volume in the Evangelical Family Library of the American Tract Society. Manuscripts may be presented until January 1, 1855, and may be examined (post paid) to Rev. Seth Bliss, 28 Cornhill, Boston, or to William A. Hallock, 160 Nassau street, New York.

DR. ROBINSON AND THE SUNDAY ARGUMENT.

All who are conversant with the argument for a change of the Sabbath, have not failed to notice, that every circumstance that can be warped into an argument for the change is freely used. Hence the journey performed by the two disciples to Emmaus, and the meeting of Christ with them, is made to add strength to the argument—as if the meeting of Christ with them was proof that He wished to add His divine sanction to the day as a Sabbath. And it is sometimes gravely asserted, that Christ at this interview instructed his disciples in the doctrine of the change. A variety of expressions of Christ have been forced into this service, and many doubtless feel that in this they have some proof of the change.

Dr. Robinson, in his visit to Palestine, has come very near to demonstrating that the journey to Emmaus, by the disciples, and the interview of Christ with them, could not have been consistent with any notion of Sabbath-keeping, under either dispensation. Moreover, his argument proves, (whether he intended it or not,) that Jesus Christ and two of his disciples secularized the first day of the week on which it is said that Christ arose from the grave. With this fact proved, it must be a desperate case that would seek to establish the sanctity of Sunday from the precept or example of Jesus Christ. We have never yet found the Saviour taking both sides of a disputed question, nor seeking to establish what he disowned.

But we will give the conclusions at which the Doctor arrives as to the distance of Emmaus from Jerusalem, and leave him and others to judge as to the sacredness of that day on which Christ and his disciples performed such a journey. We quote from the Ministry Report for July, 1853, article: "From Antipatris to Emmaus," by E. Robinson, D.D.

The Route.
Descending gradually, we came at 7.40 to the village of 'Amwda, lying on the gradual declivity of a rocky hill, sufficiently high to have an extensive view of the western plain. It is now a poor hamlet, consisting of a few mean houses. There are two fountains or wells of living water; one just by the village, and the other a little down the shallow valley west. The former is probably the one mentioned by Sozomen in the fifth century, by Theophaanes in the sixth, and again by Willibald in the eighth, as situated in a spot where three ways met (in trivio), and as possessing healing qualities.

We noticed, also, fragments of two marble columns, and were told of sarcophagi near by, which had recently been opened. But the chief relic of antiquity consists in the remains of an ancient church, just south of the village, originally a fine structure built of large hewn stones. The circular eastern end is still standing, as also the two western corners, but the intervening parts lie in ruins. Such is the present state of the ancient receptacle.

That 'Amwda represents the ancient Emmaus or Nicopolis, situated at the foot of the mountains, and according to the Rita Hieron, twenty-two Roman miles distant from Jerusalem and ten from Lydda, I believe no one doubts. The name does not occur in the Old Testament, but from the first book of Maccabees, and from Josephus we learn, that here Judas Maccabees defeated the Syrian general Gorgias; that Emmaus, having been dismantled, was afterwards fortified by the Syrian Bacchides; that under the Romans it became the head of a township; was afterwards reduced to slavery by Canus; and at last was burned by order of Vespasian, just after the death of Herod the Great. The place appears not to have received the name Nicopolis until the third century after Christ, when it was again rebuilt by the exertions of the writer Julius Africanus, who flourished about A. D. 240. This name, along with Emmaus, it continued to bear during the centuries of the crusades. Yet the writers of that epoch, and later travelers, who speak of a Castellum Emmaus, (from the Volgate), evidently had in view, as we shall see further on, the fortress at el-Ladon, a mile distant, on the Jerusalem road. The village 'Amwda, though in sight from that road, would seem hitherto to have been actually visited by no traveler.

A question of a good deal of historical interest connects itself with this place, viz., Whether it stands in any relation to the Emmaus of the New Testament, whether the two disciples were going from Jerusalem, as Jesus drew near and went with them, on the day of his resurrection? As the text of the New Testament now stands, the distance of that place from Jerusalem is said to have been about sixty stadia; which, if correct, of course excludes all idea of any connection with the present 'Amwda, the latter being at least one hundred and sixty stadia distant from the Holy City.

Yet there can be no doubt, that in the earliest period of which we have any record, after the apostolic age, the opinion prevailed in the church, that Nicopolis (as it was then called) was the scene of that narrative. Both Eusebius and Jerome, in the fourth century, are explicit on this point; the one a leading bishop and historian, the other a scholar and translator of the Scriptures. Indeed, they seem to have known of no other interpretation, nor is there a trace of any other in any ancient writer. The same opinion continued general down through succeeding ages until the commencement of the fourteenth century, when slight traces began to appear of the later idea, which fixed an Emmaus at Kubbiyah, a transfer of which there is no earlier vestige, and for which there was no possible ground, except to find an Emmaus at about sixty stadia from the Holy City.

Thus for thirteen centuries did the interpretation current in the whole church regard the Emmaus of the New Testament as identical with Nicopolis. This was not the voice of mere tradition, but the well-considered judgment of men of learning and critical skill, resident in the country, acquainted with the place in question, and occupied in investigating and describing the scriptural topography of the Holy Land. The objections which lie against this view have been well presented by Ewald and others, and are the few following:

First. The express statement of Luke, that Emmaus was distant from Jerusalem about sixty stadia. Such is, indeed, the present reading, as found in all the editions and in most of the manuscripts of the New Testament, that have come down to us. But it is no less true, that several manuscripts, and some of them of high authority, read here one hundred and sixty; and thus point to Nicopolis. This may then have been the current reading in the days of Eusebius and Jerome. There seems, indeed, to be a strong probability that it actually was so; since, other wise, those fathers, in searching for the Emmaus of Luke, had only to seek at the distance of sixty stadia from Jerusalem, in order to find it. We therefore may draw, at least, this definite conclusion, viz., that in their day such an Emmaus was unknown; and, also, that probably their copies read one hundred and sixty stadia. It may have been, that the word or numeral letter signifying a hundred had early begun to be dropped from the text by a scribe of transcribers; and that this was increased as copies were multiplied in other lands; by copyists who knew nothing of Palestine; until at length, by degrees, the omission became current in the manuscripts. Indeed, few if any of the manuscripts now extant were written in Palestine. There exist likewise, in the New Testament, other examples of erroneous readings, which have, doubtless, in like manner crept in through the error of transcribers.

Second. Josephus relates, that Vespasian (or Titus) assigned in Palestine a place of habitation for eight hundred men, whom he had dismissed from his army; it was called Emmaus, and was distant from Jerusalem sixty stadia. This, it is said, confirms the present reading of the New Testament. But since, as is well known, the works of Josephus were copied in a later age almost exclusively by Christian transcribers, this passage would very naturally be conformed to the current reading in Luke, while it is also true, that several manuscripts of Josephus still read here thirty stadia. This at least shows the reading to be variable, and therefore doubtful; so that it can have no weight in determining the text of the New Testament. Indeed, the original reading may just as well have been one hundred and sixty.

Third. The Emmaus of Luke and Josephus, it is said, is called a village; while Nicopolis was a city. But the word employed by Luke signifies strictly a town without walls, a country-town, as distinguished from a fortified city; and that used by Josephus denotes a place, and is also put for a fortified post or town. Emmaus had been laid in ashes by Vespasian shortly after the death of Herod, and would seem not to have been fully rebuilt until the third century, when it received the name of Nicopolis. When Luke wrote, therefore, it was probably still a place partially in ruins and without walls, a fitting post for a colony of disbanded soldiers.

Fourth. The distance of Nicopolis from Jerusalem is too great, it is said, to admit of the return of the two disciples the same evening, so as to meet the assembled apostles. This, however, would depend, not so much upon the distance, as upon the time when they set off. They "rose up the same hour," and naturally returned in haste, to make known their glad tidings; although, with all their haste, they could not well have traversed the distance in less than five hours. It was not yet evening when they arrived at Emmaus, and if they set off to return even as late as six o'clock, which at that season would be about sunset, they might reach the city by eleven o'clock. The apostles were assembled "for fear of the Jews," not for an evening meal; or, if so, this had already been long ended, for Jesus afterwards inquires, if they had there any food. It was evidently late. There is, therefore, nothing impossible or improbable in the supposition, that the two had hastened back a long distance late at night, perhaps with much bodily effort, to declare to their brethren the wonderful things of which they had been witnesses. A like amount of travel, on an extraordinary occasion, would be nothing strange, even at the present day.

The case then may be thus presented. On the one hand, the reading of good manuscripts gives the distance of Emmaus from Jerusalem at one hundred and sixty stadia, at which point there was a place called Emmaus, which still exists as the village 'Amwda; and all this is further supported by the critical judgment of learned men residing in the country near the time; as also by the unbroken tradition of the first thirteen centuries. On the other hand, there is the current reading of sixty stadia in most of the present manuscripts, written out of Palestine, supported only by a doubtful reading of Josephus, but with no place existing, now or at the end of the third century, to which this specification can be referred. So far as it regards the New Testament, it is a question between two various readings; one, now the current one, but with no other valid support; the other, supported likewise by manuscripts, by facts, by the judgment of early scholars, and by early and unbroken tradition. After long and repeated consideration, I am disposed to acquiesce in the judgment of Eusebius and Jerome.

STATE HOUSE CONVENTION.—The cornerstone of the building now being erected in Nassau-st., New York, by the American and Foreign Bible Society, was laid on the 1st inst., without ceremony—public services with reference to the event being reserved for the Monthly Board Meeting on the evening of the 9th inst. At that meeting Dr. Welch delivered a lengthy address, reviewing the past history and present prosperous condition of the Society. The following extract will be read with interest:—

"From the reports of our Society it may be learned that, during the brief period of its existence, it has received and disbursed more than half a million of dollars, of which the sum appropriated in cash to the foreign work amounts to $264,740. So carefully and wisely has this been dispensed, that not less than thirty-five different languages have, by distinct appropriations from our Treasury, been added to receive and widely diffuse, in whole or in important integral portions, the oracles of God. Many of these had never before been thus honored and blessed. The completion of the entire Bible in the Burman and Karen languages, at the expense of our Society, both for translating and publishing abroad this word, demands of us devout thanksgiving unto God.

"It is impracticable to ascertain the exact number of volumes which have thus been printed and distributed by our appropriations in foreign lands, but they are known to exceed half a million; for a few of the last and most successful years of our operations they have amounted to nearly 100,000 a year. They have embraced, in the aggregate, seven of the languages of Europe, twenty-one of Asia, six of North America, and one of Africa. Combining our own efforts with what has been done by Baptist missionaries and translators of the last half century, into whose labors we have been permitted, yet constrained to enter, and an aggregate of more than sixty languages and distinct dialects have in this period been enriched with the revelation of God by our and their instrumentality.

THE JEWS IN CHINA.

Some time ago, a Mr. Cohen, of California, published a statement showing the depressed condition of a remnant of Jews at Kai-fung-foo, China, and expressing the opinion that it would be practicable for Jewish missionaries to visit and greatly benefit them. This statement awakened considerable interest among the Jews of the United States and Great Britain, and led to a proposition to send missionaries among them. As a preparatory step, the Rev. Dr. Adler, of London, addressed a letter of inquiry to a Jewish firm in Canton, the answer to which we give below. It will be seen that they are unacquainted with the Jewish merchants who visited our missionaries at Shanghai, and consider the project of a mission impracticable.

Gates, July 29th, 1853.

SIR.—We beg to acknowledge the receipt of your much-respected letter, dated the 21st April last, requesting us to furnish you with such information as we are enabled to collect, regarding the Jews in China, their moral as well as their spiritual condition, their number and abodes, and whether it would be practicable and feasible to send out zealous and able ministers for the purpose of teaching them the principles of the religion of their ancestors, &c.

In reply to which we beg leave to state, that we are hardly qualified to satisfy your reverence at that point, regarding which ourselves, and most, if not all, of our neighbors are quite in the dark, there being no means even of establishing inquiries regarding them, unless through the Chinese missionaries who travel and reside in the interior of China; and even amongst them, it seems little has been said or heard on the subject, except what was printed in a pamphlet last year, by the Bishop of Hong-Kong, of which your reverence will, no doubt, have heard. Yet we may continue to say, with respect to the information obtained through local newspapers, as to the Jews here sending their children to be taught by the missionaries, we think it is mere conjecture, as we do not know or hear of any such established school, or institution in China.

As to our opinion on the probable result of able ministers being sent out here for the purpose of recalling and receiving into the bosom of Judaism all such scattered brethren, we may beg to state, that little or nothing could be done, unless such ministers are masters of the Chinese language, and have means to get into the interior of the country, where they may, by constant and habitual intercourse with the natives, meet with some of them; but this, we think, also impracticable at the present time, that traveling into the interior is attended with great risk and difficulty, in consequence of insurrection and disturbance in almost all the provinces, where the objects of the inquiries are most likely to be met with. Chinese jealousy will not admit of a stranger being in open commerce with the natives, and the eyes of the Government and public vigilance will, therefore, be an unsurmountable barrier to any undertaking, until political affairs, and the present civil war, are brought to an end and substantial stability.

This is all we have to inform you at present, and if further inquiries put us in better light of the subject, we shall do ourselves the pleasure of communicating to you.

Meanwhile, we remain, with due respect, sir, your reverence's most obedient servants.

DAVID SASSON, SOHN & CO.

BAPTIST MISSION IN BURMA.—The Agencies publishes communications from Rangoon, Bassein and Maulmain, of great interest. At Rangoon the Spirit seems to be poured out in copious effusions. More than fifty have been baptized in a little more than a month, and the number of earnest inquirers was never greater. At Tavoy the printing of the Karen Bible had advanced, on the 21st of August, to the middle of the gospel of John. The churches were peaceful and prosperous. Mr. Thomas, prevented from traveling by the rains, was teaching a class of sixteen young men, a majority of them preparing for the ministry. At Maulmain, Dr. Wade had entered on his duties as teacher of the Karen Theological School, in addition to which he preaches every week and performs other work, with the vigor of a young man. A letter from Mr. Granger describes a trip up the Irrawaddy. He speaks with surprise of the population of the country, almost insurmountable towns and villages lining the river and its branches, presenting abundant places accessible in the rains as well as in the dry season. Dr. Mason, having completed the translation of the Karen scriptures, is about to embark for this country, in such infirm health as to make it doubtful whether he can survive the voyage.

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AT FUKEU.—At the recent monthly meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the semi-annual report from the mission at Fuhku, China, was read. The missionaries are all in good health, and grateful for protection in the midst of disorders and alarms. Rumors of threatened attacks from the insurgents had frequently produced great excitement; trade was deranged, and supplies of provisions were, in a measure, cut off. Attempts to plunder were made, but the Lieutenant Governor with decision and firmness repressed them and maintained order. The state of things was unfavorable, but their work had suffered no serious interruption. The girls' school, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Cumming, was closed for a time; the two boys' schools and another for girls went on as usual. An average number of 85 children received instruction in these schools. Preaching is conducted in the four churches of the mission, in houses and school-rooms, and by the way-side. An advantageous use is made of native help in these services. Special attention is devoted to the preparation of books in colloquial style, in which the Chinese light literature is written for the masses.

The President's Message.

Continued from First Page.

in high promise of great and general usefulness.

I have omitted to ask your favorable consideration for the estimates of works of a local character in twenty-seven of the thirty-one States, amounting to one million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred dollars, because, independently of the grounds which have so often been urged against the application of the Federal Revenue for works of this character, inequality with consequent injustice is inherent in the nature of the proposition, and because the plan has proved entirely inadequate to the accomplishment of the objects sought.

The subject of internal improvements, claiming alike the interest and good will of all, has nevertheless been the basis of much political division, and has stood as a deep gulf between the States. The rule of strict construction of all powers delegated by the States to the General Government has arrayed itself, from time to time, against the rapid progress of expenditures from the National Treasury on works of a local character within the States. Notable as an epoch in the history of this subject is the Message of President Jackson, of the 27th of May, 1835, which met the system of internal improvements in its comparative infancy; but so rapid had been its growth, that the projected appropriations in that year for works of this character had risen to the alarming amount of more than one hundred millions of dollars.

In that message the President admitted the difficulty of bringing the operations of the Government to the construction of the Constitution set up in 1788, and marked it as an advisory proof of the necessity of guarding that instrument with sleepless vigilance, against the activity of precedents, which had not the sanction of its most plainly defined powers.

Our Government exists under a written compact between sovereign States, uniting for specific objects, and with specific grants to their general agent. If, then, in the progress of its administration, there have been departures from the terms and intent of the compact, it is, and will ever be, proper to refer back to the fixed standard which our fathers left us, and to make a stern effort to conform our action to it. It would seem that the fact of a principle having been related from the first by many of the wisest and most patriotic men of the Republic, and a policy having provided constant strife, without arriving at a conclusion which can be regarded as satisfactory to its most earnest advocates, should suggest the inquiry whether there may not be a plan likely to be crowned by happier results. Without perceiving any sound distinction, or intending to assert any principle as opposed to improvements needed for the protection of internal commerce, which does not equally apply to improvements upon the seaboard for the protection of foreign commerce, I submit to you, whether it may not be safely anticipated that, if the policy were once settled against appropriations by the General Government for local improvements for the benefit of commerce, localities requiring expenditures would not, by modes and means clearly legitimate and proper, raise the fund necessary for such construction as the safety or other interests of their commerce might require.

If that can be regarded as a system, which, in the experience of more than thirty years, has at no time commanded the public judgment as to give it the character of a settled policy—which, though it has produced some works of conceded importance, has been attended with an expenditure quite disproportionate to their value—and has resulted in squandering large sums upon objects which have answered no valuable purpose—the interests of the States require it to be abandoned, unless, as may be indulged for the future which has no warrant in the past.

With an anxious desire for the completion of the works which are regarded by all good citizens with sincere interest, I have deemed it my duty to ask your hands a deliberate reconsideration of the question, with a hope that, animated by a desire to promote the permanent and substantial interests of the country, your wisdom may prove equal to the task of devising and maturing a plan, which, applied to this subject, may promise something better than constant strife, the suspension of the powers of local enterprise, the exciting of vain hopes, and the disappointment of cherished expectations.

In expending the appropriations made by the last Congress, several cases have arisen in relation to works for the improvement of harbors, which involve a question as to the right of soil and jurisdiction, and have threatened conflict between the authority of the State and General Government. The right to construct a breakwater, jetty, or dam, would seem, necessarily, to carry with it the power to protect and preserve such constructions. This can only be effectually done by having jurisdiction over the soil. But no clause of the Constitution is found, on which to rest the claim of the United States to exercise jurisdiction over the soil of a State, except that conferred by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution. It is, then, submitted, whether, in all cases where constructions are to be erected by the General Government, the right of soil should not first be obtained, and legislative provision be made to cover all such cases.

For the progress made in the construction of roads within the territories, as provided for in the appropriations of the last Congress, I refer you to the Report of the Secretary of War.

There is one subject of a domestic nature, which, from its intrinsic importance, and the many interesting questions of future policy which it involves, cannot fail to receive your early attention. I allude to the means of communication, by which different parts of wide expanse of our country are to be placed in closer connection for the purposes both of defense and commercial intercourse, and more especially such as appertain to the communication of these great divisions of the Union, which lie on the opposite sides of the Rocky Mountains.

That the Government has not been unaided in this enterprise, is apparent from the aid it has afforded, through appropriations for railroads and other purposes. But the general subject will now present itself under aspects more imposing and more purely national, by reason of the surveys ordered by Congress, and now in the process of completion, for communication by railway across the Continent, and wholly within the limits of the United States.

The power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to call forth the militia to execute the laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, was conferred upon Congress, as means to provide for the common defense, and to protect a territory and a population now wide-spread and vastly multiplied. As incidental to and indispensable for the exercise of this power, it must sometimes be necessary to construct military roads and protect harbors of refuge. To appropriations for Congress for such objects, no sound objection can be raised. Happily for our country, its peaceful policy and rapidly increasing population impose upon us no urgent necessity for preparation, and leave but few trackless deserts between available points and a patriotic people ever ready and generally able to protect them. These necessary links of enterprise and energy of our people are steadily and boldly struggling to supply. All experience affirms that whatever private enterprise will avail, it is most wise for the General Government to leave to that and individual watchfulness the location and execution of all means of communication.

The surveys before alluded to were designed to ascertain the most practicable and economical route for a Railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean. Parties are now in the field making explorations, where previous examinations had not supplied sufficient data, and where there was the best reason to hope the object sought might be found. The means and time being both limited, it is not to be expected that all the accurate knowledge desired will now be obtained; but it is hoped that much and important information will be added to the stock previously possessed, and that, partial, if not full reports of the surveys ordered, will be received in time for transmission to the two Houses of Congress, on or before the first Monday in February next, as required by the act of appropriation. The magnitude of the enterprise contemplated has aroused, and will doubtless continue to excite a very general interest throughout the country. In its political, its commercial, and its military bearings, it has varied, great, and increasing elements of consideration. The heavy expense, the great delay, and, at times, fatigues attending travel by either of the isthmian routes, have demonstrated the advantage, which would result from inter-oceanic communication by such safe and rapid means as a railroad would supply.

These difficulties, which have been encountered in a period of peace, would be magnified and still further increased in time of war. But while the embarrassments already encountered, and others under new contingencies to be anticipated, may serve strikingly to exhibit the importance of such a work, neither these, nor all considerations combined, can have an appreciable value, when weighed against the obligation strictly to adhere to the Constitution, and faithfully to execute the power it confers. Within this limit and to the extent of the interest of the government involved, it would seem both expedient and proper, if an economical and practicable route shall be found, to aid, by all constitutional means, in the construction of a road, which will unite, by speedy transit, the populations of the Pacific and Atlantic States. To guard against misconception, it should be remarked that, although the power to construct, or aid in the construction of a road within the limits of a territory is not embarrassed by that question of jurisdiction which would arise within the limits of a State, it is nevertheless held to be of doubtful power, and more than doubtful propriety, even within the limits of a territory, for the general government to undertake to administer the affairs of a railroad, a canal, or other similar construction, and therefore that its connection with a work of this character should be incidental rather than primary. I will only add, at present, that, fully appreciating the magnitude of the subject, and solicited that the Atlantic and Pacific shores of the Republic may be bound together by inseparable ties of common interest, as well as of common fealty and attachment to the Union, I shall be disposed, so far as my action is concerned, to follow the lights of the Constitution, as expounded and illustrated by those whose opinions and expositions constitute the standard of my political faith in regard to the powers of the government. It is, I trust, not necessary to say, that no grandeur of enterprise, and no present urgent inducement promising popular favor, will lead me to disregard those lights, or to depart from that path, which experience has proved to be safe, and which is now radiant with the glow of prosperity and legitimate constitutional progress. We can afford to wait, but we cannot afford to overlook the ark of our security.

It is no part of my purpose to give prominence to any subject, which may properly be regarded as set at rest by the deliberate judgment of the people. But while the present is bright with promise, and the future full of demand and inducement for the exercise of active intelligence, the past can never be without useful lessons of admonition and instruction. If its dangers serve not as beacons, they will evidently fail to fulfill the object of a wise design. When the grave shall have closed over all, who are now endeavoring to meet the obligations of duty, the year 1850 will be remembered as a period filled with anxious apprehension. A successful war had just terminated. Peace brought with it a vast augmentation of territory. Disturbing questions arose, bearing upon the domestic institutions of one portion of the confederacy, and involving the constitutional rights of the States. But, notwithstanding differences of opinion and sentiment, which then existed in relation to details and specific provisions, the acquiescence of distinguished citizens, whose devotion to the Union can never be doubted, has given renewed vigor to our institutions, and restored a sense of repose and security to the public mind throughout the confederacy. That this repose is to suffer no shock during my official term, if I have power to avert it, those who placed me here may be assured. The wisdom of men who knew what independence cost—who had put all at stake upon the issue of the Revolutionary struggle—disposed of the subject to which I refer, in the only way consistent with the union of those States, and with the march of power and prosperity which has made us what we are. It is a significant fact, that from the adoption of the Constitution until the officers and soldiers of the Revolution had passed to their graves, no, through the infirmities of age and wounds, had ceased to participate actively in public affairs, there was not merely a quiet acquiescence in, but a prompt vindication of the constitutional rights of the States. The reserved powers were scrupulously respected. No statesman put forth the narrow views of casuists to justify interference and agitation, but the spirit of the compact was regarded as sacred in the eye of honor, and indispensable for the great experiment of civil liberty, which, envisioned with inherent difficulties, was yet borne forward in apparent weakness by a power superior to all obstacles. There is no condemnation which the voice of Freedom will not pronounce upon us, should we prove faithless to this great trust. While men inhabiting different parts of this great continent can no more be expected to hold the same opinions, or entertain the same sentiments, than every variety of climate or soil can be expected to furnish the same agricultural products, they can unite in a common object and sustain common principles essential to the maintenance of that object. The gallant men of the South and the North could stand together during the struggle of the Revolution; they could stand together in the more trying period which succeeded the clangor of arms. As their united valor was adequate to all the trials of the camp and dangers of the field, so their united wisdom proved equal to the greater task of founding, upon a deep and broad basis, institutions, which it has been our privilege to enjoy, and will ever be our most sacred duty to sustain. It is but the feeble expression of a faith strong and universal, to say that their sons, whose blood mingled so often upon the same field, during the war of 1812, and who have more recently borne in triumph the flag of the country upon a foreign soil, will never permit alienation of feeling, to weaken the power of their united efforts, nor internal dissensions to paralyze the great arm of freedom, uplifted for the vindication of self-government.

I have thus briefly presented such suggestions as seem to me especially worthy of your consideration. In providing for the present, you can hardly fail to avail yourselves of the light, which the experience of the past casts upon the future.

The growth of our population has now brought us, in the destined career of our national history, to a point at which it well behooves us to expand our vision over the vast perspective.

The successive decennial returns of the census since the adoption of the Constitution have revealed a law of steady progressive development, which may be stated, in general terms, as a duplication every quarter-century. Carried forward, from the point already reached, for only a short period of time as applicable to the existence of a nation, this law of progress, if unchecked, will bring us to almost incredible results. A large allowance for a diminished proportional effect of emigration would not very materially reduce the estimate, while the increased average duration of human life, known to have already resulted from the scientific and hygienic improvements of the past fifty years, will tend to keep up through the next fifty, or perhaps hundred, the same ratio of growth which has been thus revealed in our past progress; and to the influence of these causes may be added the influx of laboring masses from eastern Asia to the Pacific side of our possessions, together with the probable accession of the population already existing in other parts of our hemisphere, which, within the period in question, will feel, with yearly increasing force, the natural attraction of so vast, powerful, and prosperous a confederation of self-governing republics, and seek the privilege of being admitted within its safe and happy bosom, transferring with themselves, by a peaceful and healthy process of incorporation, spacious regions of virgin and exuberant soil, which are destined to swarm with the fast-growing and fast-spreading millions of our race.

These considerations seem fully to justify the presumption, that the law of population above stated, will continue to act with undiminished effect, through at least the next half century; and that thousands of persons who have already arrived at maturity, and are now exercising the rights of freemen, will close their eyes on the spectacle of more than one hundred millions of population embraced within the majestic proportions of the American Union. It is not merely as an interesting topic of speculation that I present these views for your consideration. They have important practical bearings upon all the political duties we are called upon to perform. Heretofore, our system of government has worked on what may be termed a miniature scale, in comparison with the development, which it must thus assume, within a future so near at hand as scarcely to be beyond the present of the existing generation.

It is evident that a confederation so vast and so varied, both in numbers and in territorial extent, in habits and in interests, could only be kept in national cohesion by the strictest fidelity to the principles of the Constitution, as understood by those who have adhered to the most restricted construction of the powers granted by the people and the States. Interpreted and applied according to those principles, the great compact adapts itself with healthy ease and freedom to an unlimited extension of that benign system of federal self-government, of which it is our glory, and, I trust, immortal charter. Let us, then, with redoubled vigilance, be on our guard against yielding to the temptation of the exercise of doubtful powers, even under the pressure of the motives of conceded temporary advantage and apparent temporary expediency.

The minimum of Federal Government, compatible with the maintenance of national unity and efficient action in our relations with the rest of the world, should afford the rule and measure of construction of our powers under the general clauses of the Constitution. A spirit of strict adherence to the sovereign rights and dignity of every State, rather than a disposition to subordinate the States into a provincial relation to the central authority, should characterize all our exercise of the respective powers temporarily vested in us as a sacred trust from the generous confidence of our constituents.

In like manner, as a manifestly indispensable condition of the perpetuation of Union, and of the realization of that magnificent national future adverted to, does the duty become yearly stronger and clearer upon us, as citizens of the several States, to cultivate a fraternal and affectionate spirit, language, and conduct, in regard to other States, and in relation to the varied interests, institutions, and habits of sentiment and opinion, which may respectively characterize them. Mutual forbearance, respect, and non-interference in our personal action as citizens, and an enlarged exercise of the most liberal principles of civility in the public dealing of State with State, whether in legislation or in the execution of laws, are the means to perpetuate that confidence and fraternity, the decay of which a mere political union, on so vast a scale, could not long survive.

In still another point of view, is an important practical duty suggested by this consideration of the magnitude of dimensions, to which our political system, with its corresponding machinery of government, is so rapidly expanding. With increased vigilance does it require us to cultivate the cardinal virtues of public frugality and official integrity and purity. Public affairs ought to be so conducted that a settled conviction shall pervade the entire Union, that nothing short of the highest tone and standard of public morality marks every part of the administration and legislation of the General Government. Thus will the federal system, whatever expansion time and progress may give it, continue more and more deeply rooted in the love and confidence of the people.

That wise economy, which is as far removed from parsimony as from corrupt and corrupting extravagance—that single regard for the public good, which will frown upon all attempts to approach the treasury with lascivious projects of private interest cloaked under public pretenses—that sound fiscal administration, which, in the legislative department, guards against the dangerous temptations incident to overflowing revenues, and, in the Executive, maintains an unsleeping watchfulness against the tendency of all national expenditure to extravagance—while they are admitted elementary political duties, may, I trust, be deemed as properly adverted to and urged, in view of the more impressive sense of that necessity, which is directly suggested by the considerations now presented.

Since the adjournment of Congress, the Vice President of the United States has passed from the scenes of earth, without having entered upon the duties of the station, to which he had been called by the voice of his countrymen. Having occupied, almost continuously, for more than thirty years, a seat in one or the other of the two Houses of Congress, and having, by his singular purity and wisdom, secured unbounded confidence and universal respect, his falling health was watched by the nation with painful solicitude. His loss to the country, under all the circumstances, has been justly regarded as irreparable.

In compliance with the act of Congress of March 2, 1853, the oath of office was administered to him on the 24th of that month, at Arisbae estate, near Manzanilla, in the island of Cuba; but his strength gradually declined, and was hardly sufficient to enable him to return to his home in Alabama, where, on the eighteenth day of April, in the most calm and peaceful way, his long and eminently useful career was terminated.

Entertaining unlimited confidence in your intelligent and patriotic devotion to the public interest, and being conscious of no motives on my part which are not inseparable from the honor and advancement of my country, I hope it may be my privilege to deserve and secure, not only your cordial cooperation in great public measures, but also those relations of mutual confidence and regard which it is always so desirable to cultivate between members of coordinate branches of the Government.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 5, 1853.

Railway Traveling in Russia.

We proceeded, bag and baggage, to the station of the Moscow Railway. Only one train starts daily; and the hour at which this most important event takes place is, or ought to be, eleven A. M. Travelers are commanded by the government to be at the station ten precisely; and even then they are liable to be told that the train is full—as it is quite an unheard-of thing to put on an extra carriage for any number of passengers. Having arrived, therefore, at ten minutes before ten, to be quite sure of being in time, our baggage was seized by a soldier, policeman, or railway porter, (for they all wear somewhat the same uniform,) and carried in one direction, while we rushed in another to show our passport for Moscow, to procure which we had been to three different offices the day before. Here the descriptions of our persons and our reasons for traveling, which it contained, being copied at full length, we were hurried to another counter, where we got a stamped; whence, catching sight of our baggage en passant, we sped on to the ticket-office, and then, returning to our portmanteaux, we went through a few formalities, which ended in receiving a ticket to add to the number of those with which our pockets were now pretty well filled. The anxiety of mind which such a variety of documents causes is not to be wondered at, when the consequences which the loss of any of them would entail are considered. Ladies in Russia do not think of trying to carry their tickets in their gloves. We now betook ourselves to the waiting-room, which we should have thought handsome had we not been detained in it so long that we got tired of admiring it. For an hour did the destined occupants of the train sit patiently on the benches, every man with head uncovered—for even a skull cap is an abomination to a Russian under a roof. Every man in military garb seemed to have the enter to the platform, while the doors were rigorously shut against us unhappy civilians. At a quarter before eleven, however, they are opened—a general rush follows, and we are hurried through a barrier, the doors of which close behind us. Soon the whole barrier becomes thronged with people, waving their adieus as ardently as if we were booked for Australia. A bell, a whistle, and a sort of dull attempt at a scream, are, as in more civilized parts of the world, the signals for starting; we leave the weeping eyes and waving pocket handkerchiefs behind us, and, in the course of ten minutes, find, to our satisfaction, that we have increased our speed to fifteen miles an hour. We have hardly done so ere we arrive at a station. Everybody rubes out and lights a cigarette. We are to stop here ten minutes, and the people during that time walk up and down the platform and smoke; then we huddle into our old places, and have time to look about us.

The carriages are large. Nobody seems to go in the first-class. A second-class carriage accommodates about fifty people. They are built as in Austria and America, with a passage in the center, permeated by a man in uniform, who occasionally takes people for their tickets. He seems to make inquiry the first time to satisfy himself that you have got one, and afterwards merely as an amusement, which he apparently enjoys the more if he fancies you are going to sleep. The men are bearded and dirty, and relate stories in a loud tone of voice, for the benefit of the whole company, most of whom have evidently never been in a railway before. At every station the same scene ensues. The unsmoked ends of the last station's cigars have been carefully preserved, and lighted afresh, and vehemently smoked on the platform during five or ten minutes, as the case may be. The stations are all very spacious and uniformly constructed, with an immense domed building for engines attached to each. Though there is only one passenger train daily, there are three goods trains, always well loaded with inland produce, tallow, fur, tea, &c., or with cotton from St. Petersburg to the interior. I should hardly think the line could possibly pay; but as it is a government concern, nobody has any means of ascertaining this fact. Whether it pays or not, the railway traveler in Russia soon discovers that the requirements of trade are as little regarded by government as its own personal convenience; for the restrictive policy of the empire must ever neutralize, in a great measure, the beneficial effects of rapid internal communication, while the difficulties which have always been placed in the way of free mercantile intercourse exist in full force, though the physical obstacles by which it has hitherto been encompassed are overcome. In fact, though the public cannot but be benefited by the formation of railroads throughout a country, it is hardly for the public benefit that railroads are constructed here, Russian railroads seem to be meant for Russian soldiers; and it is the facility thus afforded of moving large bodies of men, that invests this mode of communication in Russia with an importance which does not attach to it in Great Britain, or, perhaps, any other country in Europe, to an equal extent. When St. Petersburg, Moscow, Odessa, and Warsaw become connected, Russia assumes an entirely new position with regard to the rest of Europe. A few days, instead of many months, will then suffice to concentrate the armies of the north and south upon the Austrian or Prussian frontiers. Through this same quarter of the world, many hundred years ago, poured those barbaric hordes which overran civilized Europe—it would, indeed, be a singular testimony to the spirit of the age, if the next invaders made their descent by means of railroads.

[Russian Shores of the Black Sea.]

Ventilation.

The only ventilation practicable in the houses of the working classes is that which is termed natural ventilation, which is caused by the ascent of heated air; the air which becomes impure by the action of the lungs, or by the burning of candles, lamps, gas, &c., or by the fire, is heated, and rendered lighter than pure air; it therefore rises to the top, and cold, pure air takes its place. Thus, to ventilate a room well, it is essential that there should be two openings, one above, by means of which the impure, heated air can pass out, and another below, for the entrance of pure, cold air. In dwelling rooms, an ordinarily constructed, the impure air is imperfectly carried away by the draught of the chimney; it follows that the whole of the room above the level of the fireplace remains filled with air in a partially impure state; and the openings by which air is admitted are usually left to chance, the cracks around and under the doors and windows being the means by which it gains an entrance. If these are not sufficient to admit a proper quantity of air to supply the draught of the chimney, the latter necessarily smokes. A much better plan is, to admit the pure outer air by means of a plate of perforated zinc, placed, instead of a pane of glass, in the upper part of one or more of the windows furthest from the fire; the air entering through the zinc in small streams, becomes so mingled with the warm air of the room, that a draught is prevented, and when the windows are opposite the fire, the whole air of the room is gradually and imperceptibly changed. If to this mode of admitting pure, cold air, be added an opening in the chimney, near the ceiling, to allow the escape of the impure, warm air, much will be done for health and comfort; this opening in the chimney, however, requires a chimney-valve to prevent any downward draught of smoke. The utility of this mode of allowing air to enter and escape, for the purpose of ventilating rooms, is proved by its frequent and increasing adoption. Where appearance is an object, glass perforated with circular holes or slits may be employed instead of zinc, and chimney-valves are made of a very ornamental character. Cold air, it may be added, should never be admitted under the doors or at the bottom of a room, unless it be close to the fire or stove—otherwise it flows along the floor toward the fire-place, leaving the upper four air unchanged, and cooling most unpleasantly and injuriously the feet and legs, which are most susceptible to atmospheric changes. [London Journal.]

THE CURSE OF INTemperance.—The Grand Jury of Allegheny County, (Pa.) at their recent session, respectfully set forth—that for the last five years we have been engaged in the capacity of the grand inquest, sitting in and for the County of Allegheny; that during that time we found upward of one hundred and fifty true bills of indictment, and at the very lowest calculation four-fifths of this number are the results, either directly or indirectly, of the use of intoxicating liquors, thereby creating an enormous expense to be paid out of the public treasury, which must be replenished by imposing additional taxation upon the industrious portion of the community, and at the same time this unhappy traffic is producing poverty, wretchedness, crime, and degradation that has a most ruinous and unhappy effect upon the public welfare.

SLEEP—REMEDY FOR WOMEN.—Take the leaves of the elder tree, and make a strong decoction, and wash the parts injured from one to three times a day, and you will not be troubled with flies or worms on the wound. It also removes fever from the wound, and is healing. This is a good remedy, undoubtedly, but it cannot be used in winter; elder ointment can be. Scrape off the outer bark and throw away, then take the inner bark of elder sticks and boil it in the rind of a stout haddock to a pint of hard. This will make an excellent ointment. To make it a salve, add a little tar, or resin, or benzoin, or both, enough to make it sticky. It is equally good for man or beast. An ointment made in the same way with grated carrots, instead of elder bark, is equally good; some say better.

Mr. McGuigan, manager of the Chinese Museum at Philadelphia, is dead. He was a distinguished naturalist, the intimate friend of Bonaparte, Audubon and Peale, took part in the celebrated expedition through Central America, and brought with him on his return the first Peruvian Museum ever seen in the United States.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Sabbath bells manufacture and keep constant. A. J. on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School Bells, and Bells for all purposes. These bells are made of the best iron, and are of the most durable construction. They are of the most perfect shape, and are of the most perfect tone. They are of the most perfect quality, and are of the most perfect price. They are of the most perfect size, and are of the most perfect weight. They are of the most perfect shape, and are of the most perfect tone. They are of the most perfect quality, and are of the most perfect price. They are of the most perfect size, and are of the most perfect weight.

American Sabbath Tract Society's Publications.
THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its office, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y. viz:—

- No. 1.—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment into the consideration of the Christian Public. 32 pp.
- No. 2.—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 32 pp.
- No. 3.—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 21 pp.
- No. 4.—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 32 pp.
- No. 5.—A Short Treatise on the Sabbath, and its Observance. 4 pp.
- No. 6.—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in this week, the Seventh Day (instead of the First Day). 4 pp.
- No. 7.—Thirty-six Plain Questions presenting the main points in the Controversy: A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbatharian. 32 pp.
- No. 8.—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
- No. 9.—The Fourth Commandment: False Exposition. 4 pp.
- No. 10.—The True Sabbath: A Word and Observe. 16 pp.
- No. 11.—Religious Liberty: Etc. 32 pp.
- No. 12.—Mosaic of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
- No. 13.—The Bible Sabbath. 24 pp.
- No. 14.—Delaying Objections. 4 pp.
- No. 15.—An Appeal for the Restoration of the Bible Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists, from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 40 pp.

The Society has also published the following works, which attention is invited to:—
A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward in his Fourth Commandment. By George Curlew. Printed in London, in 1783; reprinted at Stockport, Ch., in 1802; now republished in a revised form, 168 pp.

The Royal Law Contended for. By Edward Stewart. First printed in London, in 1826. 66 pp.
Vindication of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morton, late Minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. 64 pp.
Also, a periodical sheet, gratis. The Sabbath Visitor. Price $1.00 per hundred.

The series of Essays, tracts, together with Edward Stewart's "Royal Law Contended for," and J. W. Morton's "Vindication of the True Sabbath," may be had in a bound volume. Price 50 cents.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution gratis, at the rate of 10 pence for one cent. Persons desiring them may have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to George B. Upton, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Soc.'s Publications.

The Sabbath Recorder.

Published Weekly.

Terms—$1.00 per Annum, in Advance.

The Sabbath Recorder is devoted to the exposition and vindication of the views and movements of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. It aims to present vital points and vigorous heterodoxes, which it aims to present in a clear and concise manner, and to the minds of God and the faith of Jesus. Its columns open to the advocacy of all reformatory measures which seem likely to improve the condition of society, diffuse knowledge, reclaim the heathen, and subvert the empires. In its Literary and Intellectual Departments, care is taken to furnish matter adapted to the wants and tastes of every class of readers. As a Religious and Family Newspaper, it is intended that the Recorder shall rank among the best.

The Sabbath-School Visitor.

Published Monthly.

Terms per Annum—Favorably in advance:
One copy to one address..... 5 cts
Five copies to one address..... 25 cts
Twelve copies to one address..... 60 cts
Twenty-four copies to one address..... 1.00
Forty copies to one address..... 1.50

The Seventh-day Baptist Memorial.

Published Quarterly.

Terms—$1.00 a Year, 25 Cents a Number.

Each number of the Memorial will contain a life graphic portrait of a Seventh-day Baptist pioneer, together with a variety of historical, biographical, and statistical matter, designed to illustrate the progress, and present condition of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. Wood-cut of meeting-house, with the history of the church.

Orders and remittances for the above should be addressed to the General Agent, GEORGE B. UPTON, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Postage.

The postage on the Sabbath Recorder is 12 cents a year in the State of New York, and 20 cents in any other part of the United States, payable either by the person to whom it is sent, or by the publisher. The postage on the Sabbath-School Visitor is 5 cents a year in the State of New York, and 10 cents in any other part of the United States, payable either by the person to whom it is sent, or by the publisher. The postage on the Seventh-day Baptist Memorial is 2 cents a year in any part of the United States when paid in advance, 4 cents a year when not paid in advance.

The Sabbath Recorder.

Published Weekly.

by the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-STREET, NEW YORK.

Terms—
$1.00 per year, payable in advance. Subscriptions not paid till the close of the year, will be liable to an additional charge of 25 cents.

Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the time to which they reach, except at the discretion of the publisher.

Communications, orders and remittances should be directed, postpaid, to
Geo. B. UPTON, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.
The law declares that any person to whom a Periodical is sent, is responsible for its payment. The receipt of the paper, or of the money sent to pay for it, is a receipt for the paper, and the person who takes the paper, or the money sent to pay for it, is liable for its payment. The law declares that any person to whom a Periodical is sent, is responsible for its payment. The receipt of the paper, or of the money sent to pay for it, is a receipt for the paper, and the person who takes the paper, or the money sent to pay for it, is liable for its payment.

Magazines are sent by post-office, or by express, or by freight, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the postmaster, store, or tavern-keeper, &c., or by the person to whom they are sent, the postmaster, store, or tavern-keeper, &c., or by the person to whom they are sent, the postmaster, store, or tavern-keeper, &c.

Notice of Advertising.
For a space of 10 lines or less—each insertion, 10 cts.
For a space of 20 lines or less—each insertion, 15 cts.
For a space of 30 lines or less—each insertion, 20 cts.
For a space of 40 lines or less—each insertion, 25 cts.
For a space of 50 lines or less—each insertion, 30 cts.
For a space of 60 lines or less—each insertion, 35 cts.
For a space of 70 lines or less—each insertion, 40 cts.
For a space of 80 lines or less—each insertion, 45 cts.
For a space of 90 lines or less—each insertion, 50 cts.
For a space of 100 lines or less—each insertion, 55 cts.
For a space of 110 lines or less—each insertion, 60 cts.
For a space of 120 lines or less—each insertion, 65 cts.
For a space of 130 lines or less—each insertion, 70 cts.
For a space of 140 lines or less—each insertion, 75 cts.
For a space of 150 lines or less—each insertion, 80 cts.
For a space of 160 lines or less—each insertion, 85 cts.
For a space of 170 lines or less—each insertion, 90 cts.
For a space of 180 lines or less—each insertion, 95 cts.
For a space of 190 lines or less—each insertion, 1.00.
For a space of 200 lines or less—each insertion, 1.05.
For a space of 210 lines or less—each insertion, 1.10.
For a space of 220 lines or less—each insertion, 1.15.
For a space of 230 lines or less—each insertion, 1.20.
For a space of 240 lines or less—each insertion, 1.25.
For a space of 250 lines or less—each insertion, 1.30.
For a space of 260 lines or less—each insertion, 1.35.
For a space of 270 lines or less—each insertion, 1.40.
For a space of 280 lines or less—each insertion, 1.45.
For a space of 290 lines or less—each insertion, 1.50.
For a space of 300 lines or less—each insertion, 1.55.
For a space of 310 lines or less—each insertion, 1.60.
For a space of 320 lines or less—each insertion, 1.65.
For a space of 330 lines or less—each insertion, 1.70.
For a space of 340 lines or less—each insertion, 1.75.
For a space of 350 lines or less—each insertion, 1.80.
For a space of 360 lines or less—each insertion, 1.85.
For a space of 370 lines or less—each insertion, 1.90.
For a space of 380 lines or less—each insertion, 1.95.
For a space of 390 lines or less—each insertion, 2.00.
For a space of 400 lines or less—each insertion, 2.05.
For a space of 410 lines or less—each insertion, 2.10.
For a space of 420 lines or less—each insertion, 2.15.
For a space of 430 lines or less—each insertion, 2.20.
For a space of 440 lines or less—each insertion, 2.25.
For a space of 450 lines or less—each insertion, 2.30.
For a space of 460 lines or less—each insertion, 2.35.
For a space of 470 lines or less—each insertion, 2.40.
For a space of 480 lines or less—each insertion, 2.45.
For a space of 490 lines or less—each insertion, 2.50.
For a space of 500 lines or less—each insertion, 2.55.
For a space of 510 lines or less—each insertion, 2.60.
For a space of 520 lines or less

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOS. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. X.—NO. 28.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 22, 1853.

WHOLE NO. 496.

The Sabbath Recorder.

"AN APOSTOLIC MINISTRY."

This is the title of a printed discourse delivered by Rev. Dr. Wayland before the New York Baptist Union for Ministerial Education, at its annual meeting in Rochester, N. Y., on the 19th of July last. As the subject has been much discussed of late, our readers will no doubt be glad to know what view of it is taken by this distinguished minister and teacher. We therefore copy from the Christianity the following synopsis of the discourse.

The text is Mark 16: 15—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." He first shows what this Gospel is. Next, what is meant by preaching it. We make the following extract to show his views on this point—

"When the Israelites were bitten by the fiery flying serpents, and the bite was inevitably fatal, Moses was directed to set up a brazen serpent, with the assurance that whosoever that had been bitten, looked upon it should be healed. You can imagine how the first man who felt its saving efficacy flew to communicate the news to his brethren, and urge them to avail themselves of the remedy which had delivered him from death. Every man who was healed became immediately a herald of the glad tidings to others. Every one who was saved became a preacher of the salvation, or, in other words, a preacher, until in a few minutes the news spread throughout the camp, and in this sense every tribe was evangelized."

"Allow me to illustrate the meaning of this text, as used by our Lord, by an occurrence of which I was an eye-witness. It so chanced, that, at the close of the last year with Great Britain, I was temporarily a resident of the city of New York. The prospects of the nation were shrouded in gloom. We had been for two or three years at war with the mightiest nation on earth, and, as she had now concluded a peace with the continent of Europe, we were obliged to cope with her single-handed. Our harbors were blockaded. Communication ceased between our ports was cut off. Our ships were rotting in every creek and cove where they could find a place of security. Our immense annual products were mouldering in our warehouses. The sources of profitable labor were dried up. Our currency was reduced to irredeemable paper. The extreme portions of our country were becoming hostile to each other, and differences of political opinion were embittering the peace of every household. The efforts of the government were exhausted. No one could predict when the contest would terminate, or discover the means by which it could most longer be protracted."

"It happened that on a Saturday afternoon in February, a ship was discovered in the offing, which was supposed to be a cartel, bringing home our commissioners at Genoa, from their unsuccessful mission. The sun had set gloriously, before any intelligence from the vessel had reached the city. Expectation became painfully intense, as the hours of darkness drew on. At length a boat reached the wharf, announcing the fact that a treaty of peace had been signed, and was waiting for nothing but the action of our government to become a law. The men on whose own these words first fell, rushed in breathless haste into the city, to repeat them to their friends, shouting, as they ran through the streets, Peace! peace! Every one who heard the sound repeated it. From house to house, from street to street, the news spread with electric rapidity. The whole city was in commotion. Men bearing lighted torches were flying to and fro, shouting like madmen, Peace! peace! peace! When the rupture had partially subsided, one idea occupied every mind. But few men slept that night. In groups they were gathered in the streets and by the fire-side, bemoaning the hours of midnight by reminding each other that the agony of war was over, and that a worn-out and distracted country was about to enter again upon its wretched career of prosperity. Thus, every one becoming a herald, the news soon reached every man, woman and child in the city, and, in this sense, the city was evangelized. All this you see was reasonable and proper. But when Jehovah has offered to our world a treaty of peace, when men deemed to hell may be raised to seats at the right hand of God, why is not a similar zeal displayed in proclaiming the good news? Why are men perishing all around us, and no one has ever personally offered to them salvation through a crucified Redeemer?"

His third inquiry is, "Who is to preach the Gospel?" In reply to this question, he says—

"What would be the answer to this question, if we listened to the voice of common humanity? When the brazen serpent was lifted up, who was to carry the good news throughout the camp? When the glad tidings of peace arrived in the city, who was to proclaim it to his fellow-citizens? When the news of peace with God, through the blood of the covenant, is proclaimed to us, who of us shall make it known to those perishing in sin? The answer in each case is, every one. We are commanded to give, the common principles of our nature would teach us that nothing but the grossest selfishness would claim to be exempted from the joyful duty of extending to others the blessing which we have received ourselves."

He examines this part of his subject at length, and shows conclusively, that it is the duty of the whole church to preach the Gospel. "A revival of religion," he says, "represents a church in its normal condition, the condition which Christ always intended it to maintain. Then every believer makes it his great concern to call men to repentance, not as a matter of form, but with earnest and moving persuasion. Every convert is inviting his former companions to turn unto the Lord. But, if this manner of life is appropriate to a revival, it is appropriate to all times; for men are everywhere and at all times sinners, basing to the judgment seat, and they must all perish unless they be redeemed by the blood of Christ."

His next position is, that it is the duty of some men to devote themselves exclusively to the ministry of the Gospel. "If it be asked under what circumstances may a believer undertake this service?—I answer, the New Testament, as it seems to me, always refers to it as a calling to which a man is moved by the Holy Ghost. No one, therefore, may enter the ministry except from the motive of solemn, conscientious duty." He must be conscious of a love for the work itself, and with the Apostle, he must be conscious that a necessity is laid upon him; yea, that a work rests upon him, if he preach not the Gospel."

The New Testament, he thinks, recognizes two forms of ministerial labor; that of evangelists, and that of pastors. Evangelists are specially preachers or missionaries. Pastors are placed over particular churches. The duties of pastors and evangelists are then defined—

"You see, then, my brethren, what is the New Testament idea of a church of Christ; it is a company of believers, each one united to Christ and pervaded by his spirit, and each one devoting every talent, whether ordinary or peculiar, to the work of evangelizing the world."

He then goes on to show the success that the Apostles met with in their day; alludes to the Barman mission, to Oakes and the German mission, and shows that these missions have been conducted upon the true apostolic principle. He then refers to the labors of a class of men who have now, mostly, gone to their rest.

"But it will perhaps be said, this is an example from a foreign country; would the same means for extending the reign of Christ avail to equally here at home? Can your eyes backward, then, and look upon our own condition some fifty or sixty years since. The men are now living who remember the Baptist denomination when it was the least of the thousands of Israel. We are now among the most numerous, perhaps the most numerous communion in the United States. By what means has our increase been so astonishing? How has it come to pass, that believers in such multitudes have, through our instrumentality, been added to the Lord? I think the answer at once suggests itself, if we call to mind the character of the Baptists of the preceding generation. Though plain men, generally of ordinary education, they were men of prayer, full of the Holy Ghost, each one holding himself in a special manner responsible for making known to those that were around him the truth as it is in Jesus. They were men of conference and prayer meetings, and revivals of religion; who, in barns, in school rooms, and in private houses, wherever they could collect an audience, preached repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Every talent which a church discovered among its members was called into the service of Christ. There was scarcely a church amongst us which had not its lay preachers, or, as they were termed, licentiates. Of these, many from time to time entered the regular ministry, and thus pastors were supplied in proportion to our need. Our settled ministers labored not only in their own churches, but made frequent missionary tours in the more desolate regions in their vicinity, thus doing the work of evangelists. While we were thus, with singular earnestness, devoting all the means in our power to the service of Christ, the Lord added to us daily such as should be saved. And nowhere could I appeal to the result of these labors with greater pleasure than in the very spot on which I stand. The numerous and flourishing churches that fill the whole of Western New York, this University, with all its strength in the present, and its boundless hopes for the future, all owe their existence to the self-denial, the preaching, the prayers of these plain, pious, venerable, and never to be forgotten men. They have labored, and you have entered into their labors. Of late years our progress has been much less rapid. Our views in many of these respects have changed. May not this change in our views be connected with the change in our prosperity?"

"These instances seem to me to throw some light upon the teachings of the New Testament on this subject. I fear that we are in danger in this matter of forsaking the instructions of Christ and his apostles, and following the traditions of men, not observing the tendencies to which they lead. The Reformers brought with them many of the errors of the church of Rome. May we not have derived, through them, some erroneous notions respecting the church and the Christian ministry? Can any one fail to perceive, that the views of our Hamburg brethren on this subject are more in accordance with the New Testament, than those of Luther, or Calvin, or Melancthon, or John Knox?"

Dr. Wayland then turns to the subject matter of his discourse—Christian and Ministerial Education. He holds that men are under obligation, not only to us, but to improve every talent committed unto them. Now suppose it manifest that God has called a man to devote his whole time to the ministry of the word; it is obvious that the obligation to improve his talent to the utmost is specially imperative. The substance of his ideas on this point may be inferred from the following paragraph; premising that he advocates a thorough education whenever it is practicable.

"If it be then our purpose to provide the means of improvement for those among us who are called to the ministry, it has seemed to me that we should bear in mind these elementary ideas of our denomination on this subject. If we are willing to follow, and not lead, the Spirit of God—that is, if we educate so many for the ministry until we are satisfied, not that he may be, but that he has been called of God to the work of preaching the Gospel—we shall always have among our candidates a large number of those who have passed the period of youth, and for whom the studies of youth would be unavailable, if not useless. Yet these are the very men to whom appropriate culture would be specially valuable. Others, in various degrees, have been more favored with preparatory education, and the means for more extended discipline. The means and advantages of our candidates must, therefore, be exceedingly dissimilar. If, then, we would labor to give to the ministry the means of improvement, we must provide those means for them all. A system of ministerial education, adapted to the condition of both sets in twenty of our candidates, commenced with the avowed intention of doing but one-twentieth part of its work, and of helping those only who have the least need of its assistance. We should therefore provide for all our brethren whom God has called to this service, the best instruction in our power; adapted, as far as possible, not to any theoretical view, but to the actual condition of the man of our candidates, leaving each individual, in the exercise of a sound and pious discretion, to determine the extent to which he is able to avail himself of our services. While means should be fully provided for pursuing an extended course of education, we must never lose sight of the large number of our brethren to whom an extended course would be impossible."

THE GRACE OF GOD ILLUSTRATED.

A clergyman once represented the conduct of unrepentant sinners towards God's offers of gratuitous salvation thus—

"A benevolent and rich man had a very poor neighbor, to whom he sent this message, 'I wish to make you the gift of a farm, the size of having a farm, but was too proud to receive it as a gift. So he thought of the matter much as a gift. His desire to have a home of his own was daily growing stronger, but his pride was great. At length he determined to visit him, who had made the offer. But a strange delusion about this time seized him, for he imagined that he had a bag of gold. So he came with his bag, and said to the rich man, 'I have received your message, and have come to see you. I wish to own the farm, but I wish to pay for it. I will give you a bag of gold for it.'"

"Let us see your gold," said the owner of the farm.

The poor man opened his bag and looked, and his countenance was changed, and he said, 'Sir, I thought it was gold, but I am sorry to say it is but silver; I will give you my bag of silver for your farm.'"

"Look again; I do not think it is even silver," said the owner of the farm.

The poor man looked, and as he beheld, his eyes were further opened, and he said, 'How have I been deceived! It is no silver, but only copper. Will you sell me your farm for my bag of copper? You may have it all.'"

"Look again," was the only reply.

The poor man looked; tears stood in his eyes; his delusion seemed to be gone; and he said, 'Alas! I am undone. It is not even copper. It is but brass. How poor I am! I wish to own that farm, but I have nothing to pay. Will you give me the farm?'"

The rich man replied, "Yes; that was my first and only offer. Will you accept it on such terms?"

With humility, but with eagerness, the poor man said, "Yes; and a thousand blessings on you for your kindness."

The fable is easily applied. Mather has well expressed the difference between grace and merit in few words. "God was a God to Adam before he fell; but to a God to sinners, this is grace. He was a God to Adam in innocence, by virtue of the covenant of works; but he is not a God to any sinner, but in the way of free grace." [Dr. Plumer.]

GETTING CERTIFIED.

The banks of this city require that any person not known to the paying teller, on presenting a check drawn to his own name or order, shall furnish satisfactory proof of his personal identity, before the payment of the check. This is a necessary and a reasonable regulation, though we confess we have found it somewhat embarrassing. It is a little awkward for one who has been preaching for ten years in this city, and who has located innumerable lessons of commercial honesty, to have his own identity impeached and his word refused by a bank teller whenever he has occasion to draw upon those mysterious depositories of wealth that line the sides of Wall-street. But we so seldom go to Wall-street, and possibly Wall-street so seldom comes to church, that we never know each other when we meet face to face. Again and again have we been sent away empty from the counter, to look up Mr. A., B., or C., who could certify to our physiognomy. We have thought of presenting to the banks engraved copies of our outer man—no longer in demand—but the likeness is so often disputed that we fear this would only enhance the difficulty. After all, we would rather submit to the mortification and the inconvenience, than have a check drawn in our favor paid to somebody else.

But what does such a rule signify morally? It is the testimony of the great commercial community to the doctrine of the universal depravity of men. Any man who presents himself at the counter of a bank may be a forger or a thief. The liabilities to deception are so many, and the actual frauds so frequent, that nobody is to be trusted whose honesty is not certified. Men may listen on the Sabbath to a sermon on the native excellence of mankind in general, they may hear the doctrine of total depravity denounced as a libel upon human nature, and to such preaching may say Amen, but in Wall-street on Monday morning they will presume every stranger to be a rogue until they have evidence to the contrary. Now we do not suppose there is anything peculiar in the atmosphere or the experience of Wall-street, that makes a suspicion of universal depravity so life in that quarter; we believe this is the spontaneous, untrammelled testimony of human nature against itself, and we are quite willing to submit to the inconvenience of the rule for the sake of its confirmation of our Orthodoxy. [Independent.]

MY MOTHER'S HOME.

All alone in a valley, half hid among flowers,
In home I recall with a thrill of delight,
Its consecrated walls, and its vine-covered bowers,
I see them again in my fancy tonight.
"For the home of my mother! Each long vanished scene,
That memory paints with a pencil of truth,
Gleams over my soul like a beautiful dream
Of the bright, happy days of my innocent youth.
The home of my mother! In dreams I may stray
Over the hills and the valleys as dear to my heart,
And taste the bright waters that flow in my way—
The pure and sweetest that life can impart.
The little day as sweet to my listening ear,
The flowers bloom as fragrant and beautiful now,
As when in my childhood I have wandered to hear,
Or gather the roses to twine for my brow.
But a shaft of soft music steals upon my dreams,
And the voice of my mother in tenderness comes Over my spirit, so soft and so sad, it would seem Like such an angel from their bright story house.
Home of my mother! farewell, sweetest scene,
Have I dreamed the fond eyes that look back to those Days of my childhood?
And the fond recollections of earlier years
Only deepen the sadness that dwells in my brow."

THE FIRST MARRIAGE IN THE FAMILY.

"Home!" How that little word strikes upon the heart-strings, awakening all the sweet memories that had slept in memory's chamber! Our home was a "pearl of price" among homes; not for its architectural elegance—for it was only a four gabled, brown, country house, shaded by two ancient oaks; nor was its interior crowded with luxuries that charm every sense and come from every clime. Its furniture had grown old with us, for we remembered no other; and, as we daily scrubbing, was somewhat the worse for wear, it must be confessed.

But neither the house nor its furnishings makes the home; and the charm of ours lay in the sympathy that linked the nice that called it "home" to one another. Father, mother, and seven children—five of them gay hearted girls, and two boys, peeped just enough not to be spoiled—not one link had ever been dropped from the chain of love, or one corroding drop fallen upon its brightening.

"One star differs from another star in glory," even in the firmament of home. Thus—though we could not have told a stranger which sister or brother was dearest—from our gentle "eldest," an invalid herself, but the comforter and counselor of all beside, to the curly haired boy, who romped and rejoiced in the appellation of "baby," given five years before—still, an observing eye would soon have singled out sister Ellen as the sunbeam of our heaven, the "morning star" of our constellation. She was the second in age, but the first in the inheritance of that love of responsibility which, in such a household, falls naturally upon the eldest daughter. Ellen, as I have said, was from early girlhood, and Ellen had shouldered all her burden of care and kindness, with a light heart and a lighter step. Up stairs and down stairs, in the parlor, nursery or kitchen—at the piano or the wash-tub—with pen, pencil, needle, or ladle—sister Ellen was always busy, always with a smile on her cheek, and a word on her lip.

Quickly, happily, the months and years went by. We never realized that change was to come over our land. To be sure, when mother would look in upon us, seated together with our books, paintings, and needle work, and say, in her gentle way, with only half a sigh, "Ah, girls, you are living your happiest days!" we would glance into each other's eyes, and wonder who would go first. But it was a wonder that passed away with the hour, and ruffled not even the surface of our sisterly hearts. It could not be always so—and the change came at last!

Sister Ellen was to be married!

It was like the crash of a thunder bolt in a clear summer sky! Sister Ellen—the fairy of the hearth-stone, the darling of every heart—of which we could spare her! Who had been so presumptuous as to find out her worth! For the first moment, this question burst from each surprised, half angry sister of the blushing, tearful Ellen! It was only for a moment; for our hearts told us that nobody could help loving her, who had ever looked through her loving blue eyes, into the clear, wellspring of the heart beneath. So we threw our arms around her, and hid our faces on her shoulder and lap, and sobbed without a word!

We knew very well, that the young clergyman, whose Sabbath sermons and gentle admonitions had won all hearts, had been, for months, a weekly visitor to our fire-side circle. With baby George on his knee, and George's brothers and sisters clustered about him, he had sat through many an evening, charmed by the hours away, until the clock started us with its unwelcome note of twelve warning; and the softly spoken reminder, "Girls, it is bed time!" woke more than one stifled sigh of regret. Then, sister Ellen must always go with us, to lay George in his little bed; to hear him and Annie repeat the evening prayer and hymn her lips had taught them; to comb out the long brown braids of Emily's hair; to rob Arthur of the story book over head; to rob Arthur of the story book over head; to breathe a kiss and a blessing over the pillow of each other sister, as she tucked the warm blankets tenderly about them.

We do not know how often, of late, she had stolen down again, from these sisterly duties, after our names were locked in sleep; or if our eyes and ears had ever been open to the fact, we could never have suspected the minister to be guilty of such a plot against our peace! That came was associated, in our minds, with all that was superhuman. The gray-haired pastor, who had gone to his grave six months previous, had sat so frequently on that same oaken arm-chair, and talked with us. We had loved him as a father and friend, and had almost worshipped him as the embodiment of all attainable goodness. And when Mr. Neville came among us, with his high pale forehead, and soul-kindling eyes, we had thought his face also "the face of an angel"—too glorious for the print of mortal passion!

Especially, after, in answer to an urgent call from the people among whom he was laboring, he had frankly told them that his purpose was not to remain among them, or anywhere on his native shore; that he only waited the guidance of Providence to a home in a foreign clime. After this much bared disclosure of his plans, we placed our favorite preacher on a higher pinnacle of saintship.

But sister Ellen was to be married—and married to Mr. Neville! And then—"O, sister, you are not going away to India!" burst from our lips, with a fresh gush of sob.

I was the first to look up into Ellen's troubled face. It was beaming with emotions that ruffled its calmness, as the tide-waves ruffle the sea. Her lips were firmly compressed; her eyes were fixed on some distant dream, glistened with two tears, that stood still in their channels, forbidden to fall. I almost trembled as I caught her glance.

"Sisters! Agnes—Emily!" she exclaimed in a husky whisper—"Hush! be calm! Don't break my heart! Do I love home less than—" The effort was too much; the words died on her lips. We lifted her to the bed, frightened into forgetfulness of our own grief. We soothed her until she, too, wept freely and passionately, and, in weeping, grew strong for the sacrifice to which she had pledged her heart.

We never spoke another word of remembrance to her tender heart, though often, in the few months that fitted by us together, we used to choke with sobbing, in some speech that hinted of the coming separation, and hurry from her presence to cry alone.

Our mother has told us the tidings, with white lips that quivered tenderly and sadly. No love is so uniformly unselfish as a mother's; for though she had learned to know Ellen—showered not, as we did, that she was going. She was too happy in the thought that her child had found that "pearl of price" in a cold and evil world—a true, noble, loving heart, to guide and protect her.

Father sat silently in the chimney corner, reading in the large family Bible. He was looking farther than any of us—to the perils that would environ his dearest daughter, and the privations that might come upon her young life, in that unhealthy, uncivilized corner of the globe, whither she was going. But both our parents had dedicated their children to God; and they would not cast even a shadow on the path of self-sacrifice and duty their darling had chosen.

To come down to the unromantic little details of wedding preparations; how we stitched and trimmed, packed and prepared—how we stoned rain, with tears in our eyes, and dreamed the wedding cake with sighs. But there is little to be thinking over these things. Ellen was first and foremost in all, as she had always been in every emergency, great or small. Nothing could be made without her. Even the bride's cake was taken from the oven by her own fair hands, because no servant, sister, or even mother—was willing to run the risk of burning sister Ellen's bride's cake; and she "knew just how to bake it."

We were not left alone in our labors; for Ellen had been loved by more than the household dowered. Old and young, poor and rich, united in bringing their gifts, regrets, and blessings to the chosen companion of the pastor they were soon to lose. There is something in the idea of missionary life that touches the sympathy of every heart which mamma has not too long sealed. To see one, with sympathies and refinements like our own, read the strong ties that bind to country and home, comfort and civilization, for the good of the lost and degraded heathen, brings too strongly into relief, by contrast, the selfishness and luxury of time.

The day, the hour, came. The ship was to sail from B., on the ensuing week; and it must take a way as an idol.

She stood up in the village church, that all who loved her, and longed for another sight of her sweet face, might look upon her, and speak the simple words that should link hearts for eternity. We sisters stood all around her, but not too near; for our hearts were overflowing, and we could not wear the happy faces that should grace a train of bridesmaids. She had chosen us through the day, with smiles from her own heart, and even while we were arraying her in her simple white muslin, like a lamb for sacrifice, she had charmed our thoughts into cheerfulness. It seemed like some dream of fairy land, and she the embodiment of grace and loveliness, sitting the part of some queen Titania for a little while. The dream changed to a far different reality, when, at the door of her mother's room, she put her hand into that of Henry Neville, and lifted her eye with the look that said, "Where thou goest will I go," even from all beside!

Tears fell fast in that assembly; though the good old matrons tried to smile, as they passed around the bride, to bless her and bid her good-bye. A little girl in a patched but clean frock, pushed forward, with a bouquet of violets and strawberry blossoms in her hand.

"Here, Miss Nelly—please, Miss Nelly," she cried, half laughing, half sobbing, "I picked them on purpose for you."

Ellen stooped and kissed the little eager face. The child burst into tears, and caught the folds of her dress, as though she would have buried her face there. But a strong armed woman, mindful of the bride's attire, snatched the child away.

"And for what would ye be whimpering in that style, as if you had any right to Miss Ellen?"

"She was always good to me, and she's my Sunday-School teacher!" pleaded the little girl, in a subdued undertone.

Agnes drew her to her side, and silently comforted her.

"Step aside—Father Herrick is here!" said one just then.

The crowd about the bridal pair opened, to admit of a white haired, half blind old man, who came leaning on the arm of his young granddaughter. Father Herrick was a superannuated deacon, whose good words and works had won for him a place in every heart of that little assembly.

"They told me she was going," he murmured to himself; "they say 'tis her wedding. I want to see my little girl again—bless her. Ellen sprang forward, and hid both her white, trembling hands in the large hands of the good old man. He drew her near his falling eyes, and looked wondrously into her young, soul-lit countenance.

"I can just see you, darling; and they tell me I shall never see you again! Well, well—if we go in God's way, we shall all get to heaven; and it's all right there!" He raised his hand over her head, and added, solemnly, "The blessing of blessings be upon thee, my child. Amen!"

"Amen!" echoed the voice of Henry Neville.

And Ellen looked up with the look of an angel.

So she went from us! O, the last moment of that parting hour has burst itself into my being forever! Could the human heart endure the agony of parting like that, realized to be indeed the last—lighted by no ray of hope for eternity! Would not reason reel under the pressure?

It was hard to bear; but I have no words to tell of its bitterness. She went to her missionary life; and we learned, at last, to live without her; though it was many a month before the little ones could forget to call on "Sister Ellen" in any impulse of joy, grief, or childish want. Then the start, and the sigh, "O, dear, she's gone—sister to a place!" And from tears would flow.

"Gone, but not lost;" for that First Marriage, in the family opened to us a fountain of happiness, pure into the spring of self-sacrifice could make it. Our household darling has linked us to a world of needy and perishing souls, who remain in the dear country of their birth. God bless her and her charge! Dear sister Ellen!—there may be many another breach in the family—we may all be scattered to the four winds of heaven—but no change can come over us like that which marked the First Marriage.

DANIEL A MODEL TO MEN OF BUSINESS.

Daniel was a busy statesman. Daniel had made him his chief minister. He had charge of the royal revenues, and was virtual ruler of the empire. But amidst all cares of office he maintained his wonted practice of praying three times a day. For these prayers nothing was neglected. The administration of justice was not standing still; the accounts did not run into confusion. There was no mutiny in the army, or rebellion in the provinces, from any mismanagement of his. And though disappointed rivals were ready to find an impeachment on the slightest flaw, so wise and prompt and impartial was his procedure, that they at last concluded, "We shall find no occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of God." He found leisure to run his realm of Babylon, and leisure to pray three times a day. Some would say that he must have been a frantic business man, to find so much time for prayer. It would be nearer the truth to say, that it was his taking so much time to pray which made him so diligent and successful in business. It was from God that Daniel got his knowledge, his wisdom, and his skill. In the compass and severity which these frequent approaches to God imparted to his spirit, as well as in the supernatural sagacity and forethought and power of arrangement, which God gave in direct answer to his prayers, he had a decided advantage over those men who, refusing to acknowledge God in their callings, vex themselves in vain, and who, when the fret, the worry and the sweating of their jaded day is done, find that they have accomplished less, and that little for more painfully, than their wiser brethren, who took time to pray. The man must be busier than Daniel who has not time to pray, and wiser than Daniel who can do what Daniel did without prayer to help him. Daniel was in a place where prayer was eminently useful. He was in Babylon, a place of luxury and revelry, and from his position in society he was peculiarly exposed to the idlest and voluptuous temptations around him. It was difficult, and one long it was dangerous, to maintain his singularity. But so far as there was any seduction in the pleasures of that luxurious and wicked city, prayer kept him separate; and so far as there was any danger in withholding countenance from its idol-grotes, prayer made him bold. Though the clash of symbols and the shouts of the carolers were coming in at his window, they did not disturb his devotion; and though he had not forgotten the King's decree and the lion's den, he did not close the lattice, nor try to conceal his faith and his worship; and secure alike from spiritual detriment and personal danger, the Lord hid his praying servant in the hollow of his hand.

The above is ascribed to Dr. James Hamilton. The article accords well with the Spanish proverb, "Prayer and provender hinder neither man nor beast;" that is, real, heartfelt prayer. As in the case of prophet Daniel, it makes a man both diligent and courageous. How can it be otherwise? Of whom should a devout person be afraid, and how can a spiritually-minded person be indolent? Who has ever known a praying man or woman who was either a drowsy or coward?

A HINDOO CIVILIAN SILENCED.

As Mr. Thomas was one day addressing a crowd of Hindoos on the banks of the Ganges, he was accosted by a brahmin as follows:—"Sir, don't you say that the devil tempts men to sin?" "Yes," answered the missionary.

"Then," said the brahmin, "certainly the fault is the devil's; the devil, therefore, and not man, ought to suffer the punishment." Just then observing a boat descending the river, Mr. Thomas directed his attention to it, and said, "Brahmin! do you see yonder boat?"

"Yes." "Suppose I were to send some of my friends to destroy every person on board, and bring me all that is valuable in the boat; who ought to suffer punishment? I, for the wicked sinning, or they for doing the wicked sinning?"

"Why," answered the brahmin, "you ought all to be put to death together." "Ay," replied Mr. Thomas, "if you and the devil sin together, you and the devil will be punished together."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 22, 1853.

ORIGINALLY PUBLISHED BY
J. H. BAKER, No. 10, N. Y. ST.
AND
J. H. BAKER, No. 10, N. Y. ST.

THE DUTY OF EVERY CHRISTIAN TO PREACH THE GOSPEL.

What shall be done to increase the moral power of the Church? How shall she be made "terrible as an army with banners"? To her is entrusted the gospel of Christ—that instrumentality which has proved itself mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds—the only agency which has ever proved adequate to the salvation of souls—that she may hold it forth, and try its power upon every creature. To some extent she has fulfilled her mission. Europe and America have heard of the only Saviour, and multitudes in other parts of the world have been taught the way of life through his name. Still the question arises, Might she not have done more? Might she not do more? And what hinders her usefulness as an agency for converting souls to God?

We shall not undertake to set forth all the hindrances to her usefulness, but we believe that a very serious one consists in this—that her members have, to a very great extent, lost sight of their own personal responsibility with regard to making known the gospel, and committed it to ministers. Few are the efforts now made by the "laity" to guide the perishing into the way of life; it is a work almost exclusively done by those who have been ordained to the business of teaching.

Now we see nothing in the Scriptures to indicate that it is not quite as much the duty of church members to labor for the conversion of souls, as it is of their ministers. The injunction of Christ, to preach the gospel to every creature, was not given exclusively to ministers, but to the whole church. The idea that it was intended for the Apostles, and for their successors in the ministry, finds no support in the context, nor any where else in the Sacred Volume. It was intended for all who love their Saviour, whether ministers or people, men or women. It was intended, that each individual believer should feel himself under obligation to speak to his fellow creatures of the fullness of grace and truth that is in Jesus Christ, and exhort them to flee from the wrath to come. And we verily believe that, till the people awake to this duty, and feel themselves under an obligation with regard to it as they do with regard to any duty of the moral law, the power of the Church will continue to be small, the world will abide under the dominion of Satan, and few and faint will be the lights shining in the darkness that covers the world.

Ministers often complain, and with truth, that their efforts to lead sinners to Christ are rendered nugatory by the worldliness of the Church. Their labor carefully to set forth the truth, and prove to a demonstration, that the wrath of God is upon the unbelieving. But so long as the unbelieving see the Church living in conformity to the world, her members acting as if they did not themselves recognize the necessity of being consecrated to God, what does the preaching amount to? Indeed, it is an admitted principle, on all sides, that only through the example of holiness of life on the part of those who profess Christianity, can the preaching of the gospel be of any avail.

Now, while many, alas! too many, are but indifferently careful on this point, acting as if they thought it made but little difference whether they adhered strictly to the law of righteousness, or not, the few whose consciences impel them to walk uprightly, do, nevertheless, shrink from that particular mode of manifesting their love of holiness, which it is the object of these remarks to enforce. They are willing to do justly towards their fellow creatures; they would not, for the world, wrong any man; they are kind to the poor, merciful to those who are distressed, compassionate towards all; beautiful and lovely are they in their lives altogether. But do they speak of Christ? Do they aim to set him forth as a Saviour, full of grace and truth? Do they recommend him, as they go, and show any anxiety to tell others what a precious Friend and Saviour they have found? Yet this is just what the Great Commission bids them to do. Any thing short of this is failure in Christian duty. This is the manner in which Christ would have his people evince their holiness. This is the inspired plan—the divinely prescribed plan—the plan which Christ himself marked out, and we commit a great error, when we depart from it, or attempt in any respect to modify it.

The plan of indirectly recommending Christianity by simply observing that righteousness which is enjoined in the Moral Law—a righteousness which commands universal esteem—is good, as far as it goes. It is by no means to be neglected. The Saviour himself enjoined it. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Matt. 7: 12. But it is not enough. The Christian's righteousness—we speak not of that which justifies him before God—is defective, if he does not directly speak of, and recommend, Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of sinners. For neglecting this duty, his consciences ought to reproach him; and when he comes clearly to understand, that the great end and design of his being reckoned among God's "peculiar people," is "that he may show forth the praises of him who hath called him out of darkness into his marvelous light," it will reproach him.

It is true, that this kind of righteousness is not had in esteem among men. Those who practice it must expect to find it counted leanness by them that are yet in their sin. Carnal wisdom would, therefore, say, Let just dealings with mankind, and kindness to the afflicted, be the sole method of recommending the gospel. But, planting ourselves upon the word of inspiration, we say, No. Let justice be done to man, and all necessary kindness shown to the afflicted, but by no means omit to show them the way of life through a Redeemer.

Is it objected, that to go about preaching Christ crucified is no certain indication of holiness, because many that have done so have been proved to be wicked men, notwithstanding their noisy profession? We answer, that this objection is valid so far as it relates to the public preaching of the gospel by ministers regularly appointed for the work. With them it is a regular profession, or trade, to stand up from time to time, and harangue the people upon the various points of doctrine embraced in the Christian religion. They are set apart to the work of investigating the Scriptures, and their sermons are the result of study; and if they choose to regard iniquity in their hearts, notwithstanding their public declamations in religion's favor, they can easily do it. Alas! that there have been so many wolves in sheep's clothing.

But though a man may stand up before a public assembly, and give a set discourse upon religion, and still be a bad man at heart, he cannot do the kind of preaching we refer to, unless he is a truly good man. He cannot, in a familiar, conversational way, recommend Christ to his perishing neighbors, unless his own life is measurably free from reproach. He will dread having his own inconsistencies thrown back upon him. In fact, he has no heart for any such work. None but the truly good—none but those whose bowels move with love and mercy, and are ever ready to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction—none but those who love righteousness, and hate iniquity, can feel any concern for them that are living without God in the world; no others will heartily labor for their salvation. Show us those whose hearts are so full of the love of Christ, that they are always talking about him, and recommending him, and we will show you holy men and women.

Do not facts—do not experience—confirm what we say? When a church becomes revived—when its light begins to shine—when its power begins to be felt in the surrounding community, what kind of conduct do we witness in its members? Do they not begin to charge themselves with guilt, because they have neglected to warn their neighbors? Do they not immediately teach themselves in this matter? Do they not talk to their families, to their friends, to all around, and tell them Christ is precious? They do. They all do it, not devoting it exclusively upon their minister. And while they continue so doing, the work of the Lord goes on; their own souls are edified, and sinners are saved.

But is so little measure as church members imbued with the love of Christ, that they grow weary of this work. After a short season spent in it, in which they seem to think that they have made wonderful sacrifices, they recollect that they have a minister, one whom they have hired to do such business, and they fall back into their old habits again. The minister finds himself unable to work alone, and he, too, soon sinks to the level of his people. "Like people, like priest." The church then ceases to exert a holy influence. Sinners that had been awed into respectful behavior for a time, begin to resume their boldness. Satan is let loose again, and the church becomes a by-word in community. "What is the church good for?" asks the infidel; and the church finds it difficult to answer the question.

A SCOTCHMAN'S OPINION OF AMERICA.

Wm. Chambers, Esq., of Edinburgh, Scotland, has been for three months past on a tour of observation through the British American Provinces and the United States. On the eve of departure for home, he writes to the N. Y. Tribune, under date of Dec. 13, expressing his sincere thanks for the kindness that has been extended to him, and for the opportunities he has enjoyed of becoming acquainted with the social and political characteristics of the country. He says:—

I leave the United States with much regret. I carry with me the conviction that a great and splendid future is before them. Contrary to the opinion of most travelers from England, I see here a young but rapidly growing nation offering an example to the oldest communities in Europe. It is far from my wish to flatter; but what do I not feel vast delight in seeing? I am overcome with the stupendous proportions and capacity of the country—its far-reaching fields for human subsistence and happiness. Of the American people, so little understood, and often misrepresented, I candidly own that their remarkable love of order, their energy and perseverance, their love of independence, the self-respect of even the humblest classes among them, their striking sobriety, their admirable educational systems, their many excellent libraries and universal fondness for reading, their press free from fiscal exactions, their flourishing religious institutions untampered by civil polity, their economically and spiritedly got up railways, now pushed half way to the Pacific, the neatness of their dwellings, their wonderful—and, to an Englishman, alarming—progress in the mechanical arts, the marvelous growth of their cities, and I will add their civility to strangers—I say all this gives me unequalled pleasure; and when I contrast their cities, free of pauperism and vice in its most loathsome forms, with what meets the eye in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other large cities in Britain, I feel that travelers from the old country have really little reason to speak disdainfully of America, or to exaggerate faults which at most are only partial and of no sort of account.

SKETCHES FROM NOTES OF A TOUR THROUGH VIRGINIA AND OHIO.

New Salem is rather a central point of the Seventh-day Baptist Churches of Virginia; having West Union fifteen miles on the west, Hughes' River about thirty-eight miles on the south-west, and Lost Creek about twenty miles on the south-east. The Church at Woodbridgetown, Pa., which also belongs to the Association, is about fifty miles, perhaps, a little east of north.

Lost Creek is a tributary of the West Branch of the Monongahela River. Inconceivable mainly West; and its confluence with the river is near the southern boundary of Harrison County. It takes its name, Tradition says, not, as one might infer, from its mysterious disappearance somewhere in its course, but from the circumstance that some person, in traversing the wilderness in this region, lost his way, and was discovered on this creek. The settlement of Sabbath-keepers here, is along this stream, commencing near its mouth; some living in Harrison County, and some in Lewis, the next county South. The Church here, at the time of its organization, which was nearly fifty years ago, was mostly made up of converts to the Sabbath. The same is also true of the Hughes' River Church. But the other churches consist mainly of those who observed the Sabbath when they came to this country, or those who have descended from them.

This Church (and I believe all the others) holds "Quarterly Meetings" for worship, continuing two days—Sabbath and First-day, in which they expect to be joined by more or less of their brethren from other churches. They also celebrate the Lord's Supper on such occasions. Besides these, they hold a "Yearly Meeting," not differing from them, materially, excepting what is indicated in the name.

It was "Quarterly Meeting" at the time of my visit at Lost Creek, and I had been urgently requested by Eld. Samuel D. Davis, their minister, for that reason, to be there at that time. The people here, as in almost every other place which I visited, presented a rather downcast and dejected appearance, expressive of a fear that the present declining condition of affairs among them will result in the extinction of that isolated light, which God's neglected Sabbath has shed upon this region since the time when the curling smoke arose here from the "council fire" of the native red man. Bro. Davis, though the prospect looked dark, condescended to labor, and time he can spare from the scene of his manual toil; in which he, like the rest of the ministers here, is obliged to engage for the support of his family. Oh, how my heart was moved with sympathy for him, when, on parting, I held him by the hand, and saw his eyes fill with the tears of discouragement! I could but offer an earnest prayer, that he might see the fruits of his labors, and be satisfied. Besides his labor at home, he goes once a month or oftener to New Salem. He is, thus, now that Eld. Peter Davis, their minister, has become infirm, returning to that church the kindness which he, in his earlier life, manifested to the church at Lost Creek, in visiting and laboring there for many years.

They have a frame meeting-house here, which will compare favorably with any I saw in the rural districts of the country. Yet, Time, left to do the painting, has fixed upon it a rather sober hue. Its erection, which must have been quite an achievement when it took place, is attributed to the influence of Eld. Joel Greene, during his labors there as a missionary.

Those who in former years were there as missionaries, were often mentioned, both here and elsewhere, with great interest. There are many living witnesses of their usefulness, who refer to them as the instruments of their first religious awakening. Among those who were referred to in this connection, no one was more frequently mentioned than Eld. Amos R. Wells. These master-strokes of the pen are far more distinctly visible since Time has removed this part of the picture so far in the distance, than they were when it was directly before the eye of the interested observer. Such occurrences illustrate the truth of the declaration, that the immediately perceptible fruits of missionary labor do not always furnish reliable data from which to judge of its importance and usefulness. Had the work been vigorously prosecuted on this field, it is more than probable, that the success of the Sabbath cause here would have been, at this time, a "fixed fact," instead of a problem, upon the solution of which the surviving Simeons and Anses are waiting in painful solicitude for light from Heaven.

Having attended the Quarterly Meeting, and made a number of pleasant acquaintances, First-day afternoon I returned with Eld. Peter Davis to New Salem; and the next day, Sept. 12th, my host, Jesse F. Randolph, one of the early settlers of this country, carried me to West Union, where I had an appointment for the evening, "being ready to depart on the morrow."

Our people here, in common with those about them, have labored under many embarrassments unknown in the Free States. The interests of slave labor and those of free labor are irreconcilable antagonists, and the triumph of one is the defeat of the other. Though there are but few slaves in the Western part of the State, the institution of slavery has here, as it does everywhere, spread a blight upon the interests of free labor throughout the whole domain, over which the policy and laws prevail which are adapted to its support.

The natural resources of this country are superior to those of the most of New England. The climate is comparatively mild; and though the surface is, to one who has not seen it, or something like it, almost inconceivably rough, yet there is scarcely any of it but what may be turned to good account for agricultural purposes. The soil is well adapted to the growth of wheat and corn, and various other valuable productions; but especially to grazing. Still, where it has been settled fifty or sixty years, it is, comparatively, a wilderness. The materials used for building, the appearance, or non-appearance, of the roads, the limited extent of land under cultivation, and the operation of storing hay and grain, of feeding cattle and threshing, all under the wide canopy of Heaven, if in the North, would say, "Stranger, this is a new country." There is a vast profusion of available water-power; yet the streams go rushing on to the great City of Waters, unobstructed in their course, save to lazily move the saw in some rude mill, that has set up a feeble opposition to the mallet and frower, or the grinding-stone of some other, which, to make an equitable distribution of service between water and muscular power, perhaps, gives the grinding to one, and the bolting to the other.

The country, however, has very sensibly improved, within a few years. It has been rendered accessible by the construction of turnpikes. One, the North-Western, I believe it is called, comes across the mountains from the East, and terminates at Parkersburg, on the Ohio River. New Salem and West Union are situated on this road. Another is in progress, passing New Milton. There is, also, a Railroad in progress from Parkersburg, to intersect the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad not far from Peterman. Excepting a few variations, this Road lies along the North-Western Turnpike. These public works have created markets for the products of agriculture, and facilities for the transportation of goods, for which they may be profitably exchanged.

Could Western Virginia divorce her faithless counterpart, and be erected into a Sovereign State, with a government and laws suited to the development of her vast resources, in the way of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and an efficient system of education, there would scarcely be a limit to her attainable progress in all that relates to temporal prosperity. Indeed, within the forests reduced to desirable limits, and every place made accessible by well-wrought roads; the hill-sides covered with sheep for the shearer, or sows for the dairy; the valleys dotted with school-houses, churches, villas, towns and cities; the idle streams compelled to ply, to their utmost capacity, the polished machinery of the manufacturer; isolated dwellings made acquainted with each other by the perforation of intervening hills, for the passage of the railroad track, upon which the rushing "iron horse" makes his way with his train, freighted with the products of industry, or the devotedness of traveling—now lost in his rocky retreat—now threading the tortuous ravine; it would be one of the most enchantingly beautiful portions of the earth. It would be wilderness domesticated by the petting hand of enterprise, and would offer an inviting nature for those who love to commune with Nature when in her most favorite mood for mirth and gambol.

OUR PALESTINE MISSION.

The Committee on Ours have not yet determined the time and place of embarkation for Brethren Jones and Saunders, but hope soon to be able to announce the place where the articles for shipment may be sent. Several communications have been made to the Committee, quite encouraging to the cause. The brethren in Mystic, Ct., have done nobly. They have circulated a paper for subscriptions, of which the following is a copy:—

"We the undersigned, desiring to afford our hearty cooperation with the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Board, in support of their commendable resolution to associate with their missionary operations in Palestine an Industrial or Agricultural Department; and believing it to be our duty to afford to the suffering and destitute inhabitants of that country, the means for improving their temporal as well as spiritual condition; and believing that attention to the former is the primary and most reliable means of affecting the latter, and exhibiting to the unenlightened world the true spirit and mission of the Gospel of Christ; we do therefore agree to pay the sums attached to our respective names for providing the outfit of the said Industrial Department."

More than three hundred dollars have been subscribed for the purposes above set forth, as we are informed by Bro. Greenman.

The following is from the vicinity of Carbondale, Penn:—

As we are anxious to lend a hand to carry the good tidings of the Gospel to the Jews, we will enclose ten dollars, and pray that it may be blessed of the Lord to the conversion of many souls to the truth. As we have always had a very favorable opinion of Bro. Jones, our faith is strong that his teaching will be blessed of God. This from a brother and wife living remote from the society of Seventh-day Baptists. Pray for us, that God will raise up here a people that will be willing to keep all his laws.

Yours affectionately, P. C. KENTON, ABREKT KENTON.

We say to all, "Go thou and do likewise." Other communications and remittances have been received, which will be noticed in their place.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The following extract of a letter from Mrs. Miner to her son, will be of interest to all interested in the affairs of Palestine; and therefore has been solicited for publication in the Recorder. T. B. S.

New York, Dec. 18th, 1853.

LETTER FROM PALESTINE.

PLAINS OF BABYLON, Oct. 24, 1853.

MY BELOVED SON—It is about three months, I believe, since I wrote last, having deferred writing to hear from you and our other friends at home, in reference to our settlement in this place. The loving-kindness of the Lord has been daily manifested to us, and our humble effort has been truly prospered, considering the small means in our power. The health of our family has been good, and the heat not so great as we anticipated; through July and August the thermometer rising but one day as high as 85 degrees at noon in our house during these months. The sea-breeze has been so invigorating, that I have not failed myself of being actively engaged in the bazaar (garden) over three hours in the morning and three in the evening, more than four times, I believe, since we commenced our work here.

All the varieties of vegetables which we have planted have produced well—except one crop of beans, in the hottest months. Another summer we shall better understand their season. Our Indian corn, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, egg-plants, beans, and Lima beans, are all very fine; and a little sample patch of cotton is now five feet high, and covered with pods and flowers—though planted in July! We are gaining a necessary experience, even by our small beginning, in the management of the artificial irrigation and seasons of planting, &c., so different from our farmer's practice at home, which we trust will not be lost.

We have many applications from poor Jews for clothing and medicine and employment. We have distributed (prudently) to the most needy the clothing we have received, and what we could spare of our own; also medicine to many of the sick. We have still some of the heavy goods, sent by Presbyterian friends, reserved for winter. If the donors could see their suffering need, and hear their affecting appeals and grateful thanks for the least aid, they could not fail to rejoice in the offering they have sent, and it is our earnest prayer, that they may receive eternal blessing in return. The "chickadee"—sent in the box of medicine from Dr. Engles—has been very effective in curing the ague among the poor, who, on recovery, will often come and bring a present of a few pennegoniars, or other fruit, making many acknowledgments, praying for "the peace and long life of the Americans." How happy we should be, if these little testimonies of gratitude could be laid on the table of the benevolent giver.

The land-owners—Mahomedans and Christians—near us, beg us to settle permanently among them, and offer us any choice and quantity of land, improved gardens, with houses and wells, and lands on the plains unimproved. There are a number of very favorable situations, of rich soil, urged upon us at a very low rate, as near as we can judge, at from $5 to $10 per acre, according to nearness to Jaffa.

There is only one serious difficulty in the way of an abundant return from agriculture here, and that is, the labor and expense of raising water for irrigation through the hot months, in the present clumsy Arab fashion—the only resource here. If we had one of our simple Yankee chain-pumps, we could, at a small expense, easily supply our grounds, as the water is inexhaustible. Do try and send us one of these pumps immediately, so that we can put it in order by April next, and try its power. If such an one would succeed, (and if I remember aright, they are not expensive,) we could easily introduce it here, among the gardens here, at a fair price—as the Arab farmers are very anxious for an improvement, and often inquire if we have nothing better to draw water with in our country. The expense of the present machinery, feeding mules, &c., is all that prevents this rich, extensive plain, from being soon covered with farms, as the inhabitants have an increasing interest in agriculture. What a benevolent work would it be, to bring water within the reach of the industrious poor—now only enjoyed by the rich.

The principal men of the Jews continue very friendly to us. The President and Chief Rabbi of Jaffa is much interested for us—cultivates a garden himself—frequently visits us. The second Rabbi of Jerusalem (called by our Jews "a very great one") came to see us recently, and spent the night and part of two days in our house, for the purpose of becoming personally acquainted with us. After visiting the gardens, and seeing our manner and work, he expressed himself very strongly, as gratified and pleased with our effort, and voluntarily remarked, "that any time he would engage to send us a hundred laborers to work with us."

We also receive frequent testimonies of the kind feelings of the Arabs toward us; they are kind and obliging, and very grateful for the least favor. Many sick beg for medicine; and, as I return from the garden before noon, I often find numbers waiting on the door-steps. The kind hand of the Lord has relieved many by the simple remedies with which we are familiar, and it is very affecting to hear their prayers for our blessing when healed. I would have extant, if any medical friend could advise any general specific for the common inflamed sore eyes, so prevalent among the poor here, and also for ophthalmia, and such remedies could be sent prepared with careful directions, that it may be sent, and it would ensure great relief of human misery.

Through September we have had very pleasant weather—many cloudy days, and two small showers of rain. In the "hill country" they had rain last week, and we have heavy clouds, and every appearance now of the rain setting in. We have been very busy the last three weeks, putting in the winter crop of vegetables—beans, peas, beans, turnips and cabbage—as there is no frost here. After the first rain we expect to sow some wheat, oats, buckwheat, clover, and field horse-beans, and we have great hope of raising something considerable to sell this winter.

There is much talk about war with Russia, and some of the inhabitants are in fear from the unsettled state of the Government; but we have felt no alarm, and feel as safe here as we used to do in our cottage in West Philadelphia.

At present we have a vacation, as our Jews are gone to Jerusalem and to Jaffa to keep their great autumnal feast. Our means for their employ is nearly exhausted, and unless we receive additional aid, from friends of Israel at home, we shall be under the painful necessity of denying them further aid. Some cases are so desperate, and their entreaties so urgent, that we suffer much in refusing them. A wide door is open for their relief, and for access to their hearts, in the most moderate expenditure. Nothing but means is wanting—any amount of good soil is offered on most reasonable terms, and the poor Jew, who has been almost idle and disabled for these long centuries, is appealing now to Christians—for charity in continued idleness! No! for employment, and wages only sufficient for his cheapest existence.

Several German families live near us, who came here in religious love for this land during the disturbances in their own country in 1848-9. They are poor, but industrious, and have succeeded, in great privation, to earn their bread. They have learned the language, and seek employ in agriculture, at the lowest wages here, rather than more advantageous terms in any other land. Such might be useful as honest, active helpers, if Christians would be inclined to extend this work, as the Jews are so ignorant and feeble (from long disease) it is indispensable that they should have teachers and laboring helpers with them to secure a profitable return for the labor and expenditure. One of these Germans (John G.) is living in our family for two months past, and has become so convinced that God is with us, that he has resolved with all his heart to devote himself to our cause, and unite with us in faith and spirit to labor for the Lord, asking only simple food and clothing. He is a good mechanic and experienced farmer, and his whole soul is engaged in planting and building up the desolate wastes, to the glory of the Lord, for the aid and refuge of Israel.

The Austrian and French steamers come to Jaffa every two weeks, and from our terrace we see them come and go beyond the forest of palm, orange, and banana trees, that intervene between our house and the sea, but they seldom bring any news from our far-off native land.

A few weeks since we made a short excursion of an hour and a half north, to visit a beautiful river, some distance above its entrance into the sea. There are two very ancient stone mills, with eleven sets of stones, carried round at a rapid rate, day and night, by clumsy machinery. The river contains about the same volume of water as the Schuylkill, but narrower; the soil on each side is very rich, and almost of a black color. We saw several plantations of mulberry trees, and cotton irrigated by raising water from the river.

Excuse the haste of this letter, as I received yours last evening, and wish the steamer that leaves to-day to take this—rather than wait another two weeks before sending an answer. I have, my dear son, endeavored to represent our present state to you. While the opportunity for usefulness is very great, it needs much self-denial, industry, and patience, as we live in a very fragrant manner, and have constant labor and care, with no certain support but faith in the same kind Providence that has thus far led and upheld us in this our sincere purpose to only do his will.

Your ever-devoted and sincere mother,
C. S. MINOR.

METHODIST TRACT OPERATIONS.—A year ago, the Methodists organized a Tract Society, to take charge of that class of publications. Last week the first annual meeting was held, at which a very favorable report was presented. The Society has 26 conference auxiliaries, including the German conference at Bremen; 13 conference agents, whose business it is to travel extensively throughout the bounds of the conference where they severally belong, appoint collectors, and look after the general interests of the tract cause. There are 76 collectors employed. The Society's list of tracts already amounts to 554, including those in the German tongue. The number of pages of unbound tracts distributed during the year amount to 5,576, 240; and of bound tracts there have been sold 101,789 volumes. The receipts for the year amount to $16,400.

EVADING THE LIQUOR LICENSE LAW.—Peter Buckley, of Delaware City, Del., has been convicted on four counts, and fined $104, for selling liquor without license. It appears he attempted to evade the law by selling a cracker or cigar for a tip, and then asking the purchaser to take a drink. He proved the sale of a cracker in one instance, and a cigar in another, and contended that he had the right to give away his liquor to his customer. But it was proven that the purchasers went to the house to get the liquor, and that the crackers would not have offered sufficient inducement to call them there, had the liquor not been in anticipation. The Court held that it was an attempt to evade the meaning and spirit of the law.

HOT CORN: LIFE SCENES IN NEW YORK ILLUSTRATED. By Solon Robinson. (Published by Dewitt & Davenport, 161 and 163 Nassau-st. N. Y. Pp. 438, $1.25, elegantly bound and gilt.)

In this work the author has connected by a slight thread of narrative numerous sketches which have appeared from time to time in the Daily Tribune. The pictures which he gives of every-day life in New York are true and graphic, and can not be looked upon without profit. The volume sustains to the Temperance cause a relation similar in some respects to that of Uncle Tom's Cabin to the Anti-Slavery cause. A wide circulation is inevitable.

THE HUTCHINSON FAMILY have been giving concerts in New York for several weeks past, which are largely attended by delighted audiences. This is their twelfth year in New York; and although they have given over one hundred concerts in the city, the desire to hear them seems unabated. They sing at the Tabernacle on Thursday evening, Dec. 22d, and on three successive Wednesday evenings, January 4th, 11th, and 18th, 1854.

REPORTS OF OUR SOCIETIES.—The Annual Reports of our Tract and Publishing Societies are printed and ready for distribution. The Report of the Missionary Society has not yet been by the Board ordered printed, but probably will be at the forthcoming Board meeting.

Miscellaneous.

Railway Bridge at Niagara.

This great work, which is to unite the United States with Canada by a railway, is rapidly advancing under the supervision of Mr. John A. Roebling, an engineer favorably known in connection with the suspension aqueduct on the Pennsylvania canal at Pittsburgh, and a suspension bridge over the Monongahela, near the same place. As it is to be on some account one of the most remarkable mechanical achievements in the world, we shall be pardoned for devoting considerable space to a careful description of its plan and prospects. It is well known that Stephenson, the Magnus Apollo in engineering, whose fame rests upon his Tubular Bridge over Menai Straits, has decided against the suspension principle as applied to railway bridges, mainly on the ground that it is incapable of rendering them sufficiently stiff. The successful construction of this work, therefore, at Niagara, will be a new era in bridge building. It will be doing what has not merely been done before, but what has been pronounced by the highest authority impracticable.

The present suspension bridge having been constructed in 1847 to aid in the erection of the railway bridge, will be removed after performing that service. It was begun by a boy on the Canada shore, who elevated a kite, and by means established a thread communication with the other side. Over this thread wire was drawn, and the wire cables were soon formed. The railway bridge will consist of two parts, each suspended from two cables; a covered one for common travel, and above that, on its roof, an open track for the railroad. It was first intended to build a bridge with a single floor, but the difficulty of rendering it wide enough for purposes of horse, foot and steam locomotion at the same time, without making it too heavy and too expensive, caused the plan to be abandoned. The double floor of this bridge simplifies the problem of rendering a stiff support to the weight of a railroad train, by placing under it, in addition to other props, the trusses that will form the sides of the lower portion of the bridge. The hollow tube, also, which that part will form, is expected to aid materially in strengthening the work, operating like the tube in Stephenson's bridges.

The bridge will be 800 feet long, hung by wire ropes, five feet apart, to four large wire cables, stretching from shore to shore, with a considerable deflection, over the tops of towers 60 feet high. The towers are now advanced toward completion, having been begun some four or five months since. They are fifteen feet square at the base and eight feet square at the top, built of a dark-colored limestone, very hard and compact. But the first operation, which was commenced last winter, was to sink eight shafts, 25 feet deep, in the rock below the towers, four on each side of the river. In the bottom of each of these, enlarged for the purpose, a cast-iron plate, six feet square, was placed, to which an immense chain was fastened. The shaft was then filled with masonry, the chain being imbedded in a mixture of cement, lime and sand. These chains reach the surface, outside the base of the towers, and are to connect with the cables. They will be 66 feet long, each consisting of eight links, that average over eight feet in length. The links are made alternately of seven and eight plates of wrought iron, each plate formed into one piece without a weld. Each link of eight plates has a dovetail in it, to use an expressive phrase, the plates of the sevenfold link, and the whole fifteen are riveted firmly together by an iron bolt, 2½ inches in diameter. The anchor plate at the bottom of the shaft cannot be lifted until the whole rock is raised bodily, with all its incumbent masonry. Nor can the plates and chains give way from any force which can be withstood by the cables, and they are calculated to withstand a pressure four times greater than the whole weight of the superstructure, combined with any load that will be placed upon it. The towers, it will be observed, act as fulcrums, between the chains on the one side and the cables on the other, and the weight of a loaded bridge will not rest upon them at all, but ventrally.

The cables are to be 9½ inches in diameter, each formed of 3,390 strands of wire. Long lines of wire are first formed, by fitting the ends of separate pieces to one another, and wrapping them round with smaller wire. These are then dipped in boiling oil and dried, and the process is repeated a number of times, until a coating is formed that will protect the metal thoroughly from the moisture. The wire is then wound round large cylinders. These operations are now going on upon the Canada shore. When the cable comes to be formed, the wire will be drawn over to the American side, on strands at a time, passed through the link of a chain, then drawn back to the other side, passed through a chain there, and so on, back and forth, until the whole cable is made up; this will then be tightly wound round with small wire. The cables will connect with the chains, after passing through the iron saddles on the top of the towers, where being iron blocks with a groove fitted to the cable. Each saddle rests upon a wrought iron roller, three inches in diameter, that rolls on a smooth iron plate. This is to accommodate any slight motion that may arise from unequal tension between the chains and cables, when the balance is from any cause disturbed.

Stephenson's great objection to the suspension principle, as was stated above, was the want of stiffness. It is conceded by the engineer of this bridge, in his report on the subject, that wire cables alone will not be sufficient. But he relies for stiffness, first, on the timber placed under the railway. Two girders, four feet deep, are to be placed in the upper floor, for the immediate support of the track. In addition to these, are the trusses or sides of the lower bridge, which will consist of upright posts, five feet apart, supporting the upper floor, and connected with one another by a light bridging and by iron rods. Any pressure upon either floor is thus shared with the other. The rods are to be one inch in diameter and 2½ to 3 feet long, and will connect the posts by lines crossing at right angles, between the top and bottom of the first and fifth. The vertical action of each post is by these means transferred to each of those with which it is connected. The rods will have a nut at each end, which will be screwed up tight to the post, so that these rods will make the trussing extremely rigid. Besides these two sources of stiffness, stays will be made use of, that is, iron rods reaching out from the towers to the bridges at different angles, like those sometimes employed to sustain a long and heavy gate. These three resources, it is believed, will supply to the bridge all needed stiffness.

The action of the wind will not be very great, the trussing of the lower bridge being quite open, and allowing it pretty free passage. The width of the lower part will be fifteen feet clear, of the upper twenty-four feet, the latter being elevated twenty feet above the other floor, and 330 feet above the water. As to the capacity of the bridge—supposing it covered from end to end with a loaded train, the weight of such a train is estimated at 430 tons, which, added to the weight of the bridge, 782 tons, with fifteen per cent. on the weight of the train, as the result of a speed of five miles an hour, viz: sixty-one tons, make 1,273 tons. The tension of the cables resulting from this and their average deflection, is equal to 2,240 tons. Their capacity is 10,000, or more than four times the tension. The tension referred to, it will be observed, is an extraordinary one, as it can scarcely be supposed that a loaded train equal in length to that of the bridge, will ever be allowed upon it. Assuming as the engineer does, 2,000 tons as a tension to five times that. The covered floor, were it crowded to its utmost capacity, might hold 310 tons. But as this might be closed in case of a very heavy train approaching, before it was allowed to come upon the bridge, it is not necessary to make a calculation for an extreme load upon both parts at once.

The suspension bridge at Lewistown is 1040 feet in length, the largest in the world. This will be 240 feet shorter, but a far more surprising work. It is to be done next June. Its cost was estimated at $250,000, but it is likely, we are told, to exceed that sum. Supposing it is twice as much, what a saving even, in comparison with the immense expenditure to which Stephenson has subjected the English at Menai Straits and Montreal. The tubular bridge at Montreal is not yet done or paid for to be sure, but its cost is estimated at $7,000,000. [N. Y. Evening Post.

Brems and Martyrs.

Our readers will probably all recollect the story of the Norwegian boy at Chicago, who was drowned by some older boys because he refused to assist them in robbing an orchard. Some of the papers now raise doubts as to the martyrdom of the boy, and attempt to account for his death in some other way than that first suggested. It seems to such that heroism, of the kind imputed to the boy, does not exist in the world at the present time. Such editors underrate humanity. A case of moral heroism exceeding that imputed to Knud Iversen, occurred in Marquette County, in this State, a little over a year ago, the facts of which were established by judicial investigation, and were related to us by Judge Larrabee, who presided at the trial.

A beautiful, fair-haired, blue-eyed boy, about nine years of age, was taken from the Orphan Asylum in Milwaukee and adopted by a respectable farmer of Marquette, a professor of religion and a member of the Baptist persuasion. A girl, a little older than the boy, was also adopted into the same family. Soon after these children were installed in their new home, the boy discovered criminal conduct on the part of his new mother, which he mentioned to the little girl, and it thereby came to the ears of the woman; she indignantly denied the story to the satisfaction of her husband, and insisted that the boy should be whipped until he confessed the falsehood. The man—poor, weak bigot—impelled by a sense of religious duty, proceeded to the task assigned him, by procuring a bundle of rods, stripping the child naked, and suspending him by a cord to the rafters of the house, and whipping him at intervals for over two hours, till the blood ran through the floor, making a pool upon the floor below; stopping only to rest and interrogate the boy, and getting no other reply than "Pa, I told the truth—I cannot tell a lie;" the woman all the time urging him to "do his duty." The poor little hero, at length released from his torture, threw his arms around the neck of his tormentor, kissed him, and said, "Pa, I am so cold," and died. It appeared in evidence, upon the trial of this man and woman for murder, that the child told the truth, and suffered death by slow torture rather than tell a lie. The age of heroism and martyrdom will not have passed till mothers cease to instill holy precepts into the minds of their infant offspring. The man and woman who murdered this angel child are now in the penitentiary at Wausau, to which they were sentenced for ten years. [Madison (Wis.) Argus.

Analysis of Soil.

Within a few years, an expectation has prevailed that, by means of chemical analysis, the exact composition of soils could be ascertained, and thence we should learn what special application each soil might need to make it fertile. It is obvious, that if this result were attainable, agriculture would become of the nature of an exact science; and, as might be expected, the general interest and great importance of these researches have attracted the public attention to them. The agricultural journals give notices of chemists who analyze soils for farmers, and give advice, founded on the analysis, for the application of manures. On the other hand, we have seen published the opinions of men of science to the effect that such analysis, in the present state of chemistry, does not lead to useful results. In the address of Professor Hallowell, of Alexandria, to the Agricultural Society of London, Virginia, recently published, he expresses the opinion that the analysis of the soil is "wholly useless for practical purposes."

His remarks on the subject are as follows: "I have been requested to state my opinion of the advantage of analyzing soils with the view of determining what manures to apply for their improvement; and I do so with pleasure, having had some experience in the practical part of the subject. The present state of chemical science is such as to enable the chemist to determine, with the almost precision, the constituents of a body subjected to his examination; but a difficulty lies in getting a fair specimen of the soil to operate upon. The quantity usually taken to analyze is from fifty to one hundred grains, say half a teaspoonful; and how is so small a quantity to be obtained that shall be an exact sample of the field? If it should not be an exact sample, and it appears almost impossible it ever should be, then the result will necessarily mislead, and is wholly useless for practical purposes. On this account I place comparatively little reliance upon any benefits likely to arise from a general analysis of soils; though such an analysis may sometimes be very beneficial in determining the presence of some hurtful ingredient that may be diffused through the soil, and which may be neutralized by some substance readily determined and applied. I would much more rely on a knowledge of the constituents of the rocks from which the soil has resulted, and the mode of cropping and culture to which the lands have been subjected; and thus, knowing what they originally contained, and what has been removed from them, we can readily infer what is left. If the money paid for analyzing a soil, as a general thing, were spent in the purchase of some guano, crushed bones, ashes, or lime, with which to experiment on different crops, on a small scale, it would be likely to lead to much more satisfactory and profitable results."

Parental and Filial.

Two family incidents show great results from little causes. Baron Corvier, when a very little boy, was encouraged by his mother in collecting and delineating objects of nature—the study of minerals, plants, &c., aided by drawing. During the researches made by this great man, he often referred to this maternal incident as one of the happiest circumstances of his life, furnishing good reasons that the vast services rendered to science and to the world by this great naturalist and good man, are to be traced to the judicious treatment of one mother to a little son.

About twenty years since a little boy in Western New York entered with great energy into the collection of minerals and other objects of nature. His parents soon coming to the conclusion that it was not safe to repress this spirit and his efforts, allotted to him a room and shelves for storing and arranging his collections, and by various modes encouraged this young explorer of nature's riches. His ardor and intelligence pointed him out, at the early age of sixteen, for an assistant engineer on an important railroad route. For his skill, energy, and fidelity in the work assigned him in this responsible undertaking, he was, in a short time, selected as the principal for surveying one branch of the general route. At the age of seventeen he was employed as an assistant geologist for the State of New York. When that great work was completed, he was elected to a professor's chair in a very extensive female seminary in Albany. After holding the chair for several years, he resigned it to visit Germany, where he spent two years with Liebig, renowned for his researches and discoveries in animal and vegetable chemistry. On his return from Europe, he was elected to a professor's chair in the Lawrence School of Science, in Cambridge, Mass. He now holds, at the age of thirty-two, this important place in an institution designed to advance, in scientific investigations, the graduates of colleges and universities. He is professor Horsford, son of Hon. Jeremiah Horsford, now of the New York delegation in Congress. It adds to the credit of this young and promising professor, that during his whole course, his support came from his own efforts.

The Vatican.

This word is often used, but there are many who do not understand its import. The term refers to a collection of buildings on one of the seven hills of Rome, which covers a space of 1,200 feet in length, and 1,000 in breadth. It is built on the spot once occupied by the garden of the cruel Nero. It owes its origin to the Bishop of Rome, who, in the early part of the sixth century, erected an humble residence on its site. About the year 1160, Pope Eugenius rebuilt it on a magnificent scale. Innocent II. a few years afterwards gave it up as a lodging place to Peter II. King of Arragon. In 1305, Clement V. at the instigation of the King of France, removed the Papal See from Rome to Avignon, when the Vatican remained in a condition of obscurity and neglect for more than seventy years. But soon after the return of the pontifical court to Rome, an event which had been so earnestly prayed for by a poor Petrarch, and which finally took place in 1376, the Vatican was put into a state of repair, enlarged, and it was thenceforward considered as the regular palace and residence of the Pope, who, one after the other, added fresh buildings to it, and gradually encircled it with antiquities, statues, pictures and books, until it became the richest depository in the world. The library of the Vatican was commenced fourteen hundred years ago. It contains 40,000 manuscripts, among which are some by Piley, St. Thomas, St. Charles Borromeo, and many Hebrew, Syriac, Arabian, and Armenian Bibles. The whole of the immense buildings composing the Vatican are filled with statues found beneath the ruins of ancient Rome; with paintings by the master; and with curious medals and antiquities of almost every description. When it is known that there have been exhumed more than 70,000 statues, from the ruined temples and palaces of Rome, the reader can form some idea of the richness of the Vatican. It will ever be held in veneration, by the student, the artist, and the scholar. Raphael and Michael Angelo are enthroned there, and their thrones will be enduring as the love of beauty and genius in the hearts of their worshippers.

The Cripple's Farm.

At the mass-meeting of farmers, in Concord, Mass., in March last, Hon. John W. Proctor gave as an illustration of what energy and perseverance can do, under the most discouraging and unfavorable circumstances, for improving, at one and the same time, the soil and the mind.

"A few years since," said Mr. Proctor, "Simon L. Wilson, of Methuen, sent in his statement to the committee on farms, of the Essex Society, which, when the facts came to be known, awakened much interest. It appeared that this cultivator of the soil had been a cripple from his youth, with no command of his lower extremities whatever, and only able to move from place to place, as moved by others, or in the little go-gig that his ingenuity had constructed. He had come in possession of about an acre of what was deemed a worthless bog, situated by the side of the way, for years neglected by no one—and had contrived to drain it, and to cover it from the adjoining knolls, so that he grew thereon a nursery of more than twelve thousand fruit trees, and a variety of fruit of fine quality in considerable abundance. In fact, he so managed as to be able to sell enough to support himself and his mother from the products of this reclaimed acre, thereby saving the town one hundred dollars a year, to which they would otherwise have been properly subjected."

What a lesson for those stalwart farmers, with great farms, and healthy sons, to study and put to practice, in reclaiming their wet lands and irrigating the dry ones upon their farms! "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Woman's Rights Question.

A Convention was recently held at Rochester, to consider the following questions, which we suppose are leading ones in the creed of those technically called Woman's Rights People:—

1. Why should not Woman's work be paid for according to the quality of the work done, and not the sex of the worker?
2. How shall we open for Woman's energies new spheres of well-remunerated industry?
3. Why should not Wives, equally with Husbands, be entitled to their own earnings?
4. Why should not Widows, equally with Widowers, become by law the legal Guardians, as they certainly are by nature the natural Guardians, of their own children?
5. On what just ground do the laws make a distinction between Men and Women, in regard to the ownership of property, inheritance, and the administration of estates?
6. Why should Women, any more than Men, be taxed without representation?
7. Why may not Women claim to be tried by a jury of their peers with exactly the same right as Men claim to be and actually are?
8. If Women need the protection of the laws, and are subject to the penalties of the laws, equally with Men, why should they not have an equal influence in making the laws, and appointing Legislatures, the Judiciary and Executive?

And finally, if Governments—according to our National Declaration of Independence—"derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," why should Women, any more than Men, be governed without their own consent; and why, therefore, is not Woman's right to Suffrage precisely equal to Man's?

The Sandwich Islands.

As the question of annexing the group of islands composing the Hawaiian kingdom is becoming to assume considerable importance, it is proper that the people should be put in possession of all the information in regard to the subject which can be obtained.

The Hawaiian kingdom is composed of a group of islands, seven in number, situated in latitude from 19 to 23 degrees north, and on a direct line between San Francisco and Hong Kong, 2,260 miles from the former, and 5,000 miles from the latter. Their position is an important one in a commercial point of view, affording a good recruiting station for our fleets of whaling ships in the Arctic and Pacific, and their convenient distance from California would make them desirable as a depot for ocean mail steamers between California and China. They are important also as a military and naval station for the protection of our commerce in the North Pacific.

The native population of the islands is about 60,000, distributed among the different islands as follows:—Hawaii, 20,000; Oahu, 18,000; Niihau, 13,000; Kauai, 5,000; Molokai, 2,500; Nihoa, 700; Lanai, 300.

This part of the population, however, is rapidly decreasing, and in a quarter of a century, they will probably have entirely passed away. All the leading interests of the kingdom are in the hands of the Americans now. The rich planters and merchants are Americans; the missionaries who have done so much in bringing them from a state of rude barbarism, and christianizing and civilizing them, are a large majority Americans. The members of the King's ministry are Americans, and nearly all the important offices are in the hands of Americans. American sentiments, feelings, laws, and institutions, must follow as a natural consequence.

Hushine.

The schooner Emma Parker, Captain Latham, lately arrived from Hushine, one of the Society Islands, after a passage of 37 days, bringing many interesting particulars of this distant, but important group.

Hushine is in lon. 151 deg. 8. min. E., and lat. 16 deg. 43. min. S., and is consequently distant 3,764 miles from San Francisco in a S. E. by S. course. The group, consisting of six islands, was discovered by Cook in 1769, and has until lately been under the influence of the English missionaries; but the policy of the French Government to extend its foreign possessions, has led them to usurp and claim the principal island, (Tahiti,) where they are now forming a naval rendezvous.

A description of one island will answer for any of the others. Hushine is about fifty miles each way and its coast is indented with numerous small harbors, receiving the waters of several small streams—almost rivers. The principal of these, and the most secure for shipping, is that called Owhere Bay, where the Emma Parker received her cargo. The Islanders, in number some 900, have several little settlements on the coast, but the principal one is at the Bay above mentioned. The interior abounds in beautiful valleys, exquisite spots of woodland, waving with all the luxuriant verdure of the tropics, and smiled upon by a perpetual summer. The gentle S. W. trades preserve a delicious coolness, and in this, as in all the Polynesian Islands, there seems but to wait the benefits of a constant communication with the civilized world to make it a most delightful residence. The hills and rising grounds present the most serene picture of rural beauty, their sides covered with a never-dying expanse of rich green grass and bright-leaved trees. The numerous valleys bordering the tiny streams afford excellent pasturing to the small stock of cows and horses which have been imported from Australia. The island produces, in the greatest luxuriance, oranges, lemons, yams, breadfruit, bananas, limes and sweet potatoes, and the natives subsist upon those during the greater part of the year. The bays afford a variety of delicious fish.

THE ANCIENT LITURGICAL CITIES.—The Rev. Dr. Cooley, the well-known author, recently writing on the subject of a park projected for Finsbury, one of the London Boroughs, points out a remarkable, "that in the divine allotment of the cities of Israel, this provision was distinctly made, in the forty-eight cities of the Levites, of a circle of open ground surrounding each city of a thousand cubits breadth, probably for gardens and fruits, and an exterior circle of two thousand cubits more, called the 'fields of the suburbs,' for pasture, and, of course, recreation, both forming a large space, which was expressly for-bidden to be encroached on in any sale of dwellings or alienation of property. 'That the fields of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold, for it is their perpetual possession.' (Leviticus 25: 34.) We are to remember, also, that this special provision for health was made in the midst of a nation almost wholly agricultural, already 'sitting under its vine and fig-tree, and singularly exempted from those drudgeries which in later times shut up men in infected air, and maled generations of half the life of man."

Cure for the Potato Rot.

In a recent conversation with Mr. John Barrett, Jr., of Cayuga Bridge, on the subject of the potato disease, he informed us that he had not been troubled with the rot for many years, and that there was a very simple remedy for it which all might apply with very little trouble or expense.

Mr. Barrett stated that a few years since, he, as well as most of his neighbors, lost their entire crop of potatoes by the rot—that the next spring he was compelled to go to another town for seed, where he procured a supply for himself and an adjoining neighbor, and where he was told how to prevent the disease. He said he and his neighbor planted the seed he procured on adjoining fields—the soil and treatment similar—only, that Mr. B. applied the remedy recommended to him—which consisted in sowing ashes over the field once a week for six weeks, commencing shortly after the second hoeing of the crop. He used from two to three bushels of ashes per acre, which is sufficient to give the potato-tops a good dusting. The result was, that his field was entirely free from the disease, while the potatoes on the adjoining field, without this application of ashes, rotted badly. Since then Mr. B., as well as most of his neighbors, had applied ashes, and had been entirely free from the disease.

Potato Harrow.

Three patents for machines to dig potatoes have been granted. The first of these consists of an axle and pair of wheels, drawn by a pair of horses, and around said axle, which moves with the wheels, a drum or cylinder is arranged, and armed with rows of radial teeth, while immediately behind and beneath, and in the same curve with the periphery of the said radial teeth on said drum, is arranged a fixed rake, which has the ends of its curved teeth at the lowest part of the machine, while its rear part and head extend upward and backward in the curve of said drum to the highest part of the machine. As the machine is drawn forward, the row of potatoes to be dug, the rake teeth of the fixed rake run into or under the hills of potatoes, while the radial teeth on the drum sweep backward along the potatoes toward the curved teeth, and as the dirt falls out, the potatoes are carried rearward and upward between the drum teeth and the curved rake head, and when at the top of the drum they roll off into the cart body.

A second machine of this character has also been patented, substituting for the radial teeth on the drum a series of stiff brushes, and for the upper portion of the curved rake head, in the rear of the drum, an endless belt of open-work axle, or their equivalent, for the purpose of allowing the dirt to fall out, and to carry up the potatoes and deliver them into the cart body.

A NOVEL GIFT.—The Gazette des Hôpitaux, one of the oldest medical journals in France, has just received a donation of 10,000 francs, from a physician attached to one of the hospitals in Paris, on condition—1. That the donor's name shall be kept inviolably secret; 2. That 3,000 francs of the sum shall be employed in encouraging the authors of useful and practical papers published in the Gazette; and 3. That the remaining 7,000 francs shall be employed in distributing copies of the Gazette to physicians or students who are too poor to pay the whole or any part of the subscription—the simple declaration to that effect, of the applicants, being all that is to be required. This is probably the first time, in the history of the periodical press, that a journal has been the object of such munificence.

DURABILITY OF WOOD.—The piles under the London Bridge have been driven 500 years, and on examining them in 1846 they were found to be little decayed. Old Savoy Place, in the city of London, was built 650 years ago, and the wooden piles, consisting of oak, elm, beech and chestnut, were found, upon recent examination, to be perfectly sound. Of the durability of timber in a wet state, the piles of a bridge built by the Emperor Trajan over the Danube, afford a striking example. One of these piles was taken up and found to be petrified to the depth of three-fourths of an inch, but the rest of the wood was not different from its former state, though it had been driven 1600 years.

INTERESTING TO LEMBERMEN.—Chief Justice Taney has recently decided in Admiralty, in the United States Circuit Court for the Maryland District, that lumber rafts wrecked on the Susquehanna or any public navigable river, while being floated down or anchored in the river, are not the subject of salvage; that they are not subject to admiralty jurisdiction, as they are not intended for the navigation of the sea or arms of the sea; and that any assistance rendered to such rafts, when in danger of being broken or swept down by the current, is not a salvage-service, and makes no liability to a recompense; that all intermeddling with such property in such cases is at the risk of those intermeddling.

Sir George Gore, who arrived at St. Louis some days ago en route to Texas on a hunting excursion, was robbed between Alton and Springfield of his portmanteau, containing a draft for $5,000 on a house in New York, and $300 in gold and jewelry. Sir George telegraphed to New York to stop payment of the draft.

Mr. Alfred E. Beach has commenced a useful monthly paper, called the "People's Journal," an illustrated record of Agriculture, Mechanics, Science and Useful Knowledge, at 50 cents a year, or 12½ cents for a single number. Office at 88 Nassau-street. The first number is an excellent specimen.

A monster tunnel is now in course of construction near Cincinnati, Ohio, on the route of what is called the Short Line Railroad. The tunnel proper will be 8,094 feet in length, or, with its approaches, which are to be added, 10,011 feet. It will be 20 feet wide and 23 high.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE 8 Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and other bells. These bells are hung with the best iron yokes with movable arms. They can be rung around as the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These bells are manufactured from the best stock and are sent in iron casings, at this Foundry those were first used, and are kept in a great improvement. We give a written warranty that if Church bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast and change. The tone of all bells is warranted. Nearly 5000 bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best bells for soundness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up bells for Churches, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River. Free Canal, and Railroad facilities in every direction. As this is the largest establishment of bells in the U. S. and the largest assortment of bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to bells in any of the States. Old bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compensators, &c., constantly on hand. Address, A. MERRILL'S SONS, West Troy, N. Y.

American Sabbath Tract Society's Publications.

THE American Sabbath Tract Society publishes the following tracts, which are for sale at its Postoffice, No. 9 Spruce-st., N. Y., viz:—

- No. 1.—Reasons for introducing the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment into the consideration of the Christian Public. 32 pp.
- No. 2.—Moral Nature and Scriptural Observance of the Sabbath. 32 pp.
- No. 3.—Authority for the Change of the Day of the Sabbath. 21 pp.
- No. 4.—The Sabbath and Lord's Day: A History of their Observance in the Christian Church. 32 pp.
- No. 5.—A Christian's Answer to the Old and New Testament. 4 pp.
- No. 6.—Twenty Reasons for keeping holy, in each week, the Seventh Day instead of the First Day. 4 pp.
- No. 7.—Thirty-six Plain Questions, presenting the main points in the Controversy: A Dialogue between a Minister of the Gospel and a Sabbathist; Containing Col. 8 pp.
- No. 8.—The Sabbath Controversy: The True Issue. 4 pp.
- No. 9.—The Fourth Commandment (False Exposition). 4 pp.
- No. 10.—The True Sabbath 2^d revised and General. 12 pp.
- No. 11.—Religious Liberty Examined by Legislation. 16 pp.
- No. 12.—Misuse of the Term Sabbath. 8 pp.
- No. 13.—The Bible Sabbath. 34 pp.
- No. 14.—Delaying Objections. 4 pp.
- No. 15.—An Appeal for the Restoration of the Bible Sabbath, in an Address to the Baptists, from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference. 40 pp.

The Society has also published the following works to which attention is invited:—

- A Defense of the Sabbath, in reply to Ward on the Fourth Commandment, by George Carlow, first printed in London, in 1741; reprinted at Stockholm, U. S. in 1802; now republished in a revised form. 148 pp.
- The Royal Law Contended for, by Edward Stansell, first published in London, in 1837. 60 pp.
- Validation of the True Sabbath, by J. W. Morris, late Missionary of the Reformed-Prebyterian Church. 64 pp.
- Also, a periodical sheet, quarto, The Sabbath Visitor. Price 10¢ per hundred.

The series of fifteen tracts, together with Edward Stansell's "Royal Law Contended for," and J. W. Morris's "Validation of the True Sabbath," may be had in a bound volume. Price 50 cents.

These tracts will be furnished to those wishing them for distribution or sale, at the rate of 15¢ per one cent. Persons desiring them can have them forwarded by mail or otherwise, on sending their address, with a remittance, to GEORGE B. URRAN, Corresponding Secretary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Soc.'s Publications.

The Sabbath Recorder.

Published Weekly.

Terms—$2 00 per Annum, in Advance.

The Sabbath Recorder is devoted to the exposition and vindication of the views and movements of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. It aims to present every subject of religious controversy, in the same time that it gives obedience to the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Its columns are open to the advocacy of all reformatory measures which seem likely to improve the condition of society, diffuse knowledge, reclaim the ignorant, and relieve the enslaved. In the Literary and Intelligence Departments, care is taken to furnish matter relevant to the wants and views of every class of readers. A Religious and Family Newspaper, it is intended that the Recorder shall rank among the best.

The Sabbath-School Visitor.

Published Monthly.

Terms per Annum—Fifty cents in Advance.

One copy to one address..... 5¢
Five copies to one address..... 25¢
Ten copies to one address..... 50¢
Twenty copies to one address..... 1 00
Twenty-five copies to one address..... 1 25
Fifty copies to one address..... 2 50

The Seventh-day Baptist Memorial.

Published Quarterly.

Terms—$1 00 a Year, 25 Cents a Number.

Each number of the Memorial will contain a graphic portrait of a Seventh-day Baptist preacher, together with a variety of historical, biographical, statistical material, designed to illustrate the progress, and present condition of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination. Wood-cutting and engraving have been introduced from time to time in connection with the history of the church.

CP Orders and remittances for the above should be addressed to the General Agent, GEORGE B. URRAN, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Postage.

The postage on the Sabbath Recorder is 25 cents a year to the State of New York, and 50 cents on other parts of the United States, payable quarterly or yearly in advance. The postage on the Sabbath-School Visitor is 25 cents a year to the State of New York, and 50 cents on other parts of the United States, payable in advance. The postage on the Seventh-day Baptist Memorial is 1 cent a year to the State of New York, and 2 cents on other parts of the United States, payable in advance.

The Sabbath Recorder.

Published Weekly.

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, at NO. 9 SPRUCE-STREET, NEW YORK.

Terms—$2 00 per year, payable in Advance. Subscribers not paid till the close of the year, will be held to an additional charge of 50 cents.

For each additional square, two-thirds the above rate.

WHOLE NO. 497

found his own best achievement—a yellow dark centuries of solitary and ion with ages of peace and virtue ght that his own eyes had seen. His r was not unlike the rock which he the desert.
 [Ongood.]

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 29, 1853.

JOHN B. UTTER, EDITOR & PUBLISHER.
JAMES B. BARTON, ASSISTANT EDITOR.
J. M. BARTON, ASSISTANT EDITOR.
J. M. BARTON, ASSISTANT EDITOR.

Business Notice.—The Sabbath-day Register Publishing Office has been in operation nearly two years—long enough, we think, to have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the wants of the community. We have therefore decided to alter the form of the paper, and to issue it as a weekly paper, to be published on the Sabbath-day. The new paper will be published on the Sabbath-day, and will contain all the news and intelligence of the week. It will be published at the same price as the old paper, and will be as useful and as interesting as the old paper. We have therefore decided to alter the form of the paper, and to issue it as a weekly paper, to be published on the Sabbath-day. The new paper will be published on the Sabbath-day, and will contain all the news and intelligence of the week. It will be published at the same price as the old paper, and will be as useful and as interesting as the old paper.

THE DUTY OF EVERY CHRISTIAN TO PREACH THE GOSPEL—AGAIN.

Our readers must have discovered, from our remarks last week, that our idea of preaching the gospel, as enjoined by Christ in the Great Commission, is somewhat different from the popular one. We suppose the gospel is preached, wherever Christ is presented to perishing sinners as an all-sufficient Saviour. It makes no difference whether this is done in the way of a set discourse to a public assembly, or in the way of a fire-side conversation—whether to a company regularly gathered for the purpose, or to a little group casually met with—whether by ordained ministers, or by those who are not recognized in the character of ministers—whether by men, or by women—whether by white persons, or by those of dark skin—whether by slaves in bondage, or by those who glory in being free. Any kind of communication, which conveys in clear and intelligible language to a perishing sinner, the good news of a Saviour, and that Jesus is the very Saviour he needs, is preaching the gospel to him. And this is just what Christ meant, when he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

According to this view, it is not necessary, in order that one may preach the gospel, that he be able to instruct believers in Christian doctrine. It is only necessary that he bear witness to the simple fact, that Christ is risen from the dead, with power to save. As the word preach means simply to proclaim—to announce, or publish—and as the word gospel means simply good news—that is, the good news that Christ, once crucified for sin, is risen from the dead, with power to save to the uttermost of that come to God by him—the Commission, rightly interpreted, means nothing more nor less than this:—"I, Jesus, that was dead, am alive again; all power in heaven and in earth is vested in me; go, ye that love me, tell the good news to every body." Now, is not any one capable of fulfilling a commission thus simple? Is not the humblest disciple in the church capable of doing it? Is it necessary that he be specially called and ordained to the work, the same as if he were to be invested with the pastoral or oversight of a church? No, it is a simple story, that any body can tell; and if told in sincerity and earnestness, Christ will bless the telling of it.

Yet of this kind of preaching, very little is done; and if any of it is done, the people, for the most part, do not minister much to it. For their own part, they calculate to live honestly, to show kindness to the distressed, labor in useful callings, and to do all that they can in the way of recommending religion indirectly; but if any thing is to be said about Christ in the way of a direct appeal to the unconvinced, it is the minister's duty, and not theirs.

We are firmly persuaded, that this indirect method of preaching Christianity will never suffice to develop the power of this system. And if the Church neglects herself with it, few and limited will be the triumphs of Truth. Satan will continue to hold the world in bondage, as he now does. The reasons of our persuasion are these:—

1. It is not in accordance with the divine plan. It is God's plan, that sinners shall be saved through the preaching of Christ crucified. 1 Cor. 1: 18, Rom. 1: 16. And any scheme which leaves out this great doctrine, or even neglects it in the background, is offensive to God. He cannot attend it with his blessing, and who is mad enough to suppose, that any scheme will succeed without His blessing? If we believe that the carnal mind is hostile against God—if we believe that the heart is corrupt, and fully set to do evil—we must suppose that men would be persuaded by arguments whatever to change their course, unless those arguments were accompanied with a divine influence, making them feel the evil of sin, and that there is a way in which they can be pardoned. But this divine influence is inseparable from the gospel. It accompanies no scheme which ignores, or undervalues, the great doctrine of Atonement. This doctrine must be made prominent. It must be set forward, and made first, in every scheme which aims at the salvation of the world. We may be unable to say why it should always be made so prominent, and may therefore think it foolish to be forever holding it forth as the beginning and end of all reformatory effort. We may think it would be wiser to go to work in another manner. But God has determined otherwise; and we may rest assured, that He will send wisdom to accompany the scheme which He has determined upon, and not the one which human wisdom dictates.

Now, we suppose that Christians, for the most part, at least so many of them as our remarks are likely to reach—would reply, that they have no disposition to undervalue the Atonement, and could by no means reject it, as an unimportant doctrine of Scripture. Theoretically, perhaps, this is true. But an orthodox theory, floating somewhere in the upper regions of the head, but not coming down low enough to influence the heart, and (by consequence) the "issues of life," is of little account. What is the practical system of Christians? What is that which they habitually act out? They (that is, the better portion of them) do indeed show their good works—they are careful to display their regard for righteousness in all their dealings with mankind—but, for any thing that ever passes their lips, no one would ever know whether this righteousness were the fruit of their faith in Christ, or merely the result of a good education. And they confine themselves strictly to this indirect method of recommending Christianity, that the doctrine of Atonement is seldom, or never, heard from them. They do not preach the gospel. Christ crucified is practically ignored in all their attempts to influence the lives of their fellow creatures. It is set forth only in the minister's sermons.

But the minister's sermons do not make the doctrine prominent enough—that is, they are not sufficient to create in the mind of the community a conviction, that the whole body of Christians is alive to its importance. The people need to hear the doctrine, not only from the minister, but from every church member. When they see the whole church zealous to make it known, when they see this badge of discipleship worn by every member, and all striving to display it as the power which is to redeem the world, and the only power which can redeem it—they can hold out no longer. An overturning follows at once, proving that nothing was gained, when Christians were ashamed to preach Christ, and that every thing is gained, when they are bold to proclaim him.

2. The ultimate tendency of this plan is to wear away the holiness of the church itself. We have said, and it is universally admitted, that holiness of conduct on the part of God's people is indispensable to the moral power of the church. But how is this holiness to be maintained? It must have something to feed upon; and sound reason would say, that the instrumentality which developed it in the first place, was necessary to perpetuate it. Now, it is the doctrine of Christ crucified, received by faith, that is the means of creating the soul anew in righteousness and true holiness. No person was ever made holy without it. And it is certain, as all experience proves, that growth in holiness is promoted only by constant meditations in, and actions of faith upon, the Great Atonement. This being so, would not the work of proclaiming to sinners the fullness of Christ as a Saviour, be the means of establishing believers themselves in holiness? Would it not make them more holy? For, certainly, the more their minds are occupied with that which first broke up the love of sin with themselves, the more holy they must become. And, conversely, the less they are thus occupied, the greater is the opportunity for sin to regain its ascendancy over them. Now, as most Christians habitually neglect to preach Christ to others, so their minds are not as constantly stirred up to the subject as they ought to be. What they hear from the minister on the Sabbath, joined with their own private exercises, is about all the stimulus they have. They have not excitement enough to keep their minds actively exercised upon Christ and Him crucified. And what is the consequence? Why, just what might be expected. Their holiness wanes. Their zeal grows cold. They become worldly, prayerless, indifferent to the cause of God. Sin gets the ascendancy; selfishness begins to manifest itself in their actions; the world says of them, that there is little difference between them and those that make no profession. And, alas! it is too true.

Now, if there is such a power in the doctrine of Christ crucified as the word of inspiration declares, and as every real Christian knows, it is worthy of being employed more extensively by the Church than it is now, and more extensively than it can be by the limited ministry under her control. "Would God, that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put His Spirit upon them!"

3. It is dark before we reached Parkersburg, and the river was still so low that boats run with no regularity, none having passed, either way, for twenty-four hours. The landing, all along the Ohio, above Cincinnati, is effected by means of floating wharves. The "wharfboat" here being constructed with a view to lodging detained travelers, as boats were every hour expected, I determined to avail myself of this opportunity to be on hand, in case one should arrive. Having paid a "quarter" for the use of a berth, which might have been disposed of to the advantage of my successor in the purchase and use of "Lyons' Powder," I lay down; but not to sleep.

About midnight I was aroused from a state of nervous abstraction by the shrill whistle of a boat for Cincinnati. I hurried down, and was soon on board, and under way.

The passage, until we reached the mouth of the Great Kanawha, was slow and tedious. The scenery along the river is not very attractive. There is, however, a marked difference, most of the way, in appearance of enterprise and thrift, in favor of the Ohio side. Almost all the landings were on that side. Among the interests that attract business here, besides agriculture, iron and coal seemed to be prominent.

My two companions, one a Pennsylvanian, who had come with me from West Union, and the other the son of a Virginia slaveholder, who had met us at Parkersburg, were very sociable men, and did much to abate the tediousness of the passage. The Pennsylvanian was a Presbyterian, and a plain husbandman. I had some conversation with him upon the subject of the Sabbath. He took a number

SKETCHES FROM NOTES OF A TOUR THROUGH VIRGINIA AND OHIO.

Having made arrangements to meet the stage at the Post-Office at about 4 o'clock the next morning, I took lodgings about a quarter of a mile distant. Just as I was invited to sit down to a breakfast which had been prepared by the hand of that hospitality for which the people of this country are remarkable, the rumbling of an old-fashioned "Yankee" coach along the turnpike announced the arrival of my conveyance. I hastened on, accompanied by John Davis, Esq., my obliging host, as far as the river, (Middle Island), which lay across my way. He "set" me over, in a little craft that is kept here for the purpose of shortening the path to "town," and I was soon at the Post-Office, where I waited for the tardy operation of changing the mail, &c. long enough to have eaten breakfast a number of times. We were, however, after a while, "under motion" for Parkersburg. The distance is 56 miles. The turnpike runs, most of the way, through uninhabited portions of country, winding right and left, like a crawling serpent, as do all the ways here, for the purpose of securing an easier grade. The "Stage Houses" are mostly solitary log buildings.

On starting from the first of these stopping places to which we came, where we had an opportunity to breakfast, I chose a seat on the outside; which I found very convenient for the observation of whatever new or interesting appearance lay along our secluded way. Among the novelties, I noticed a nervous setting little reptile, wriggling along, which, on being described, my companionable "John" said must be a scorpion.

There are venomous serpents of various kinds all through the country, but the people seem by no means to regard it a serious matter to be bitten by them. I saw not less than six or seven persons who had been bitten—once by a rattlesnake, and twice by copperheads. One man, however, whom I saw in an almost helpless condition, attributed it, mostly, to the bite of a snake in the hand.

This man is one of a somewhat numerous family here, from New Jersey. Their ancestors were from Wales. His brother, Eld. Ezekiel Bee, of the Middle Island Church, told me that when a boy, before coming to Virginia, he had seen a very ancient manuscript history of the family, which he believed to be an abridgment of an older and more extended work. This history, he said, showed that the family were the descendants of Abraham; and though at a remote period they embraced Christianity, they had never forsaken the observance of the Sabbath. I think he said, also, that it referred to a time when Sabbath-keepers in Wales were very numerous. He is unable to tell where the manuscript is, but thinks that it fell to some branch of the family, formerly living in the eastern part of Pennsylvania. If it could be found, it would, perhaps, bring to light many interesting facts. May not some of the old people of New Jersey be instrumental in furnishing a clue to its discovery? If in existence, my informant says, it must be in the possession of those who do not now observe the Sabbath.

Some twenty miles from Parkersburg, we passed what they call a burning spring. The driver stopped the coach and went with us to the spot. It is near the turnpike, on a high hill, and comes out from under a ledge of rock just reaching the surface. There are two apertures within a few feet of each other. The amount of water discharged is very small, and the escape of gas is attended with a constant bubbling. Some lighted paper was held near the water, instantaneously igniting the gas, which burned with an unsteady flame, as if its escape were at intervals, like breathing. The flame seemed also to be drawn in, as if there were a movement in opposite directions. We left it burning, which continues until it is by some means extinguished. A strong wind is sufficient for the purpose.

It was dark before we reached Parkersburg, and the river was still so low that boats run with no regularity, none having passed, either way, for twenty-four hours. The landing, all along the Ohio, above Cincinnati, is effected by means of floating wharves. The "wharfboat" here being constructed with a view to lodging detained travelers, as boats were every hour expected, I determined to avail myself of this opportunity to be on hand, in case one should arrive. Having paid a "quarter" for the use of a berth, which might have been disposed of to the advantage of my successor in the purchase and use of "Lyons' Powder," I lay down; but not to sleep.

About midnight I was aroused from a state of nervous abstraction by the shrill whistle of a boat for Cincinnati. I hurried down, and was soon on board, and under way.

The passage, until we reached the mouth of the Great Kanawha, was slow and tedious. The scenery along the river is not very attractive. There is, however, a marked difference, most of the way, in appearance of enterprise and thrift, in favor of the Ohio side. Almost all the landings were on that side. Among the interests that attract business here, besides agriculture, iron and coal seemed to be prominent.

of the positions which are commonly taken, in justification of treating the first day of the week as Sabbath, and when I reviewed them, he frankly acknowledged that they did not stand the test of criticism. "But," said he, "if I could express it as I think, I believe, after all, it is right."

The view of Cincinnati, from the deck of a steamer upon the river above, is very fine. It seems to sit nestling on the "sunny side" of a gentle inclination, laying its feet in the majestic Ohio; with a bold bluff for a screen, hung against the distant sky in the background.

My way, as far as I could proceed by rail-road, was on the direct route from this place to Sandusky, on Lake Erie. I took the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railroad to the latter place, (where I left my two friends,) and the Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad to Huntsville. The country, especially between Cincinnati and Dayton, is exceedingly fine and beautiful.

Reached Huntsville about 11½ o'clock P.M., and found that I was within twelve miles of Sabbath-keeping friends. The next morning I found the landlord willing, though not anxious, to go and carry me that distance for $2.50. I thought I could better glorify God in walking the journey, than in paying that amount for the privilege of riding. I, however, found an opportunity to ride about four miles on the way, after which I shouldered my baggage, and set up an independent pedestrian line. The weather was oppressively warm, and when I reached Bro. Wm. Van Horn's, a distance of eight miles, I was glad to meet cordially and find a place to rest.

VOICE—UTTERANCE.

Each temperament is marked by its peculiar faculty of voice—of utterance. The lymphatic draws out, with a lazy, languid tone. The sanguine is sprightly and cheerful—words more lightly and animated. The nervous is quick, jerking, energetic, and generally without anything deep, rich, or sonorous in its utterance. The bilious gives a deep, full, energetic, bass voice. The endless intermingling of temperaments gives an endless variety of intonation.

Again, every state, desire, emotion, and feeling, creates a peculiarity of voice. Tranquillity, for instance, gives a gentle, easy flow of utterance. Dignity, solemnity, reverence, adoration, and all other sentiments producing respect or deliberation, are naturally expressed by a voice full, monotonous, and slow, with but slight and simple inflections. Gayety, frolicsome, eager argument, and earnest description, on the other hand, being opposite in character, require a sprightly, quick, natural utterance. Confidence, positiveness, authority, in affirming, denying, forbidding, reproving, commanding, denouncing, or defying, are indicated by the downward inflection of the voice, accompanied with energetic and forcible expression. Ill humor, discontent, petulance, repining, vexation, and chagrin, have a kind of whining, snapping, snarling way of manifesting themselves, more easily experienced than described. Hate, wrath, rage, malice, revenge, vary in their manifestations, from the low, guttural, inarticulate mutterings, with compressed lip and clenched fist, to quick, aspirated, abrupt vociferations.

Envy, jealousy, scorn, disgust, derision, mockery, and execration, are generally slow and guttural—sometimes tremulous and piercing. Mirth, jollity, are often quick and broken in expression—delight, joy, exultation, and rapture, are slower, more dignified. Apprehension, fear, secrecy, mystery, curiosity, suspicion, eagerness, and hope, are manifested by a suppressed aspiration, often amounting to a whisper—admiration, astonishment, amazement, are more forcible and emphatic. Penitence, submission, petition, supplication, tenderness, love, condolence, pity, grief, and sorrow, manifest themselves in a slow, soft, tremulous voice, each word commencing slowly, lightly, tremblingly, and swelling in soft, full proportions, then dying away as gradually and as softly. Pain, bodily or mental, is tremulous, aspirated, broken—often running up into great force and high pitch of voice, when the pain is excessive. Terror breaks forth with great force, amounting, frequently, to a scream. Apathy, irresolution, shame, fatigue, weakness, speak with a voice slow, faltering, and feeble.

With such indices, we may determine, very accurately, the peculiarity of mind, as well as the emotions, states and desires, prompting the utterance manifested. You hear a voice, perhaps, drawing out half-formed words, that seem to come from half-closed lips. It indicates a being stupid and lazy—a spirit dull and sluggish. You hear again a voice forcible and suppliant—the exponent of a tongue running hap-hazard upon all subjects and on all occasions. You instinctively feel that such a person cannot be trusted with important matters; for words, being such a cheap commodity, he will, very innocently of course, tell all that he knows, and more too. The most important injunction to such a one is to request him to close the flood-gates of his mind, whence are flowing all of his senses.

Listen, next, to that mellifluous voice, which sounds quietly and sweetly in your ear. Be assured that it is the voice of some gentle, quiet spirit, for such is not the utterance of rough, coarse, harsh spirits. A stranger voice of this stamp awakes an instinctive sympathy, from the fact that we take it as an index of his soul. Mark the contrast between such a voice and that of a coarse, vulgar, ill-natured churl. Every word comes harsh and grating. His language seems to saw rather than cut into your soul. Who does not, on hearing such a voice, shudder and shrink from too close approach? And why? Simply because you feel, assured that his voice is an exponent of his character. Notice, next, those clear, silvery voices. They ring out joyous and free, indicating a happy union of the strong, the gentle, and refined. Be assured that such an one you will find a happy, good-hearted spirit, whose mission it is to make all around happy. The characteristics of another voice have been noticed in the earliest ages. Homer says:—

"Still silence holds the camp to peace,
Therewith only clamored in the throng,
Loquacious, loud and turbulent of tongue,
Averted by no shame, by no respect controlled,
In slender tray, in reproaches bold;
With witty taunts, studious to define;
Scorn all his joy, laughter all his aim."

There is another voice which sounds like the rumblings of distant thunder. The utterance is not rapid, perhaps, but comes as if backed up by some irresistible, some mighty impulse. Such characteristics are generally considered as indicative of depth, grasp, and power of intellect.

We mention one other voice, quite different from the last, but none the less marked. Every word is like the lightning's flash—every sentence comes like the quick clap of some earthward directed thunderbolt, burning and shattering all opposing objects. Every drop of such a man's blood seems to contain what Faraday says every drop of water does—enough of electricity to burst the globe-end of any house. Such men are the real go-ahead spirits, scaling walls, compassing land and sea, to accomplish their object. They are the regular high-pressure steam-engines, with a fifty pound weight upon each safety valve, and the steam hissing from every screw and jointure.

STREET PREACHING IN NEW YORK.

The arrest of Mr. Parsons, while preaching in the open air in the eastern part of New York City, has been the occasion of much excitement and discussion. Now that the excitement is past, and the naked facts are understood, the whole matter resolves itself into a mistake. There is a very proper and necessary city ordinance, which forbids preaching in the streets without special license, which ordinance the police had been instructed to enforce. Mr. Parsons was preaching in a square, by permission of the owner, which he had a perfect right to do. But a policeman, who did not perceive the difference between preaching in the open air and in the street, supposing that the ordinance had been broken, made the arrest out of which grew so much excitement. On the one side it was charged that Mr. P. was arrested because he declared against the Catholics, and on the other, that he was arrested simply for a breach of the city ordinance. The facts began to be understood before the following Sunday, and this circumstance, in connection with the restraining influence of the Mayor's Proclamation, preserved the city from threatened outbreak.

Just at this time, when the subject of street-preaching and freedom of speech is under discussion, the following suggestions from the Independent are worthy of consideration. Speaking of the street preachers, that paper says:—

"Such persons remind us that the Saviour and his Apostles preached in the open air, and in the streets and markets of the cities, and they would feel convicted of a grievous lack of boldness and fidelity, unless they or somebody should stand upon the reservoir on the Sabbath and spit their threats and lungs against a northwester, or should clear up the doctrine of depravity amid the density of an East River fog. Now, to reason from the climate and the social usages of Palestine to our own, is simply absurd. Palestine is an open-air, outdoor country. For many months of the year the people sleep upon the ground or the house-top, almost without covering. By day business is carried on to a great extent in the open air. The shops are out of doors—mere open stalls or niches along the sides of streets, which are commonly covered with some light roofing to keep off the sun. Sometimes they have not even this protection; and the chief market places, as at Gaza and at Joppa, are large open areas about the gates of the city. There is not in any town in Palestine a hall for the purpose of public discussion. Excepting the mosques and the few churches, there are no places of public assembly; and in the time of Christ these were wanting. In Jerusalem the temple was then standing, and in one of its open cloisters our Saviour taught. The area of the temple, with the exception of the sanctuary itself, had no roof; neither had the theaters of Greece and Rome, of Herculaneum and Pompeii, any covering; neither has the vast modern arena at Milan. At Athens there was no covered hall in which Paul could address the multitude; Plato taught in an Academic grove; the supreme court of the Aeeopagan sat upon the summit of a rock belovved out into a circular basin; Demosthenes spoke from a ledge of table rock surrounded with tiers of seats borne from the same rock, and all open to the sun, in the sight of Penitence and Hymettus, and the Bay of Salamis, and the wide-spread Aegean. In the Agora, or on Mars Hill, or from the Pnyx, he must speak, if he spoke at all. Now to insist that because under the sky of Palestine and of Greece—where everything of a public nature was transacted in the open air—our Lord and his apostles preached in the open air, therefore we as faithful imitators of their example must preach, out of doors in this changeable and killing climate, is like insisting that a convert on board the Arctic expedition shall be dipped through a sea-hole into polar-sea, because our Lord went down into the soft warm waters of the Jordan to receive baptism of John. Yet there are minds that would go to martyrdom for either of these imitative virtues."

Again, since in this city, where the climate favors meetings within doors, and for at least half the year forbids out-door assemblies as dangerous to health, there are provided churches, halls, lecture-rooms, saloons, of all shapes, sizes, and prices, for the accommodation of whoever may wish to preach and get hearers, it is absurd to speak of the prohibition of street preaching on the score of public quiet and order, as an infringement upon the rights of conscience and the freedom of discussion.

If Governor hires Metropolitan Hall, and there denounces the Pope as the first child of the Devil, and Archbishop Hughes as his cousin-german, nobody has any right to interfere, by word, or gesture, or act. If Archbishop Hughes in the same place denounces Protestants as infidels, and leads forth the spiritual and temporal power of the Papacy as the grand conservator of popular freedom, no man has a right there to resent the unblushing lie. If either speaker were molested, it would be the duty of the police to preserve order, and to maintain the right of free speech even at the point of the bayonet. But if either of these gentlemen should attempt to enlighten the public in front of Metropolitan Hall, it would be the duty of the police to disperse the crowd, and if the speaker persisted, to arrest him for a breach of the peace. We go to the death for a breach of the peace where free discussion belongs; but to obstruct the thoroughfares of a populous and busy city is a nuisance—an injury to business, to property, and perhaps to life—that cannot be tolerated, whether from a political speaker, a temperance lecturer, a critic of razor-strops and envelopes, an organ-grinder, or a preacher of the Gospel. Freedom of locomotion is a right as well as freedom of speech.

SEPARATING SLAVE FAMILIES.—The Richmond Enquirer is down on the Governor of Alabama for venturing to suggest, in a message to the Legislature, the enactment of a law to prevent the separation of husband from wife and parent from children in the sale of slaves. It says:—

"This recommendation strikes us as being most unwise and impolitic. If slaves are property, then should they be at the absolute disposal of the master, or be subject only to such legal provisions as are designed for the protection of life and limb. If the relation of master and slave be infringed for any purpose, it would be difficult to fix any limit to the encroachment. If the slaveholder yield one point to the demands of Abolition fanaticism, he will but embolden the spirit which he aims to conciliate, and will be driven to some more substantial concession."

Bequest.—Mr. Thomas Hanna, who died lately at Pittsburgh, Pa., gave $1,000 each to the Bible, Tract, and Colonization Societies, the Foreign Missions and Home Missions of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, and to the Western Theological Seminary. He then directed that the remainder of his property—about $800,000—should be divided into seven equal parts—an equal portion of which was bequeathed to each of his six children. The remaining part was left to the Presbytery of Monacaheula of the Associate Reformed Church, with full power to devote it to objects of benevolence, not overlooking the Theological Seminary or the missionary cause.

Consequence, near.—Under the head of "Mistake," the N. Y. Tribune of Dec. 23d, says:—

"W. S. writes us that he lately sent us a dollar (see subscription) and a communication for our columns—that the dollar was retained and the paper sent, but the article not printed—whereupon he concludes that 'money is in better demand in your market than brains.' If that were true, it would not be amazing, as Editors are supposed to have more brains than money; but his conclusion is not justified by his premises. The money was genuine; the brains bogus."

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—The bark Lyman, for Calcutta, sailed from Boston on Monday, Dec. 12, having on board as passengers, Rev. J. L. Douglass, formerly pastor of the Baptist church in Fort Ann, N. Y., and Rev. A. R. H. Crawley, of Nova Scotia, and a graduate of Newton Theological Institution, Missionaries of the American Baptist Missionary Union to Burma.

The Congressional Journal finds pleasure in the fact "of a growing conviction in the churches, of the necessity of increasing the support of their pastors, when the cost of the means of living has so perceptibly advanced. The Pearl Street church in New York voluntarily offered their minister, Rev. Mr. Adams, a salary of $12,000, which, we believe, is the largest paid in the State. The Congressional society in Quincy, Mass., recently added $200 to the salary of their minister, Rev. Nelson Clark, with great unanimity."

At a meeting of the Manchester Bible Society, the Earl of Shaftesbury stated that he had recently learned, that of the 350 pocket-books and purses, at a meeting of whom in London, he some time since presided, only fifty were now pursuing their callings. The reformation of the remainder had been effected by the Bible in the hands of a very humble man.

The friends of the Theological Seminary of Virginia will be glad to learn that the late Rev. James W. Cooke, the Secretary for Foreign Missions, left by his library of about 1000 volumes to the Seminary. The books are valuable, and just such as the students most need.

The Rev. R. G. Hurlston, of Texas, who was appointed one of the Vice-Presidents of the American Bible Union declines the honor. He says: "After examining the question on both sides, and in all its bearings, I am profoundly penetrated with the conviction, that its origin, progress, and results, are full of mischief and evil to our churches."

It is stated that thirty-nine Roman Catholics have publicly joined the National Church of Geneva; this was the result of a course of lectures on the errors of Popery, given by ministers of the Reformed faith, during last winter.

It is proposed to commence a Religious Newspaper in Oregon, entitled the North Pacific Christian Advocate, about the 1st of March next.

The fund collected for the benefit of the Madral Family is to be invested in a government annuity on the joint lives of Francesco and Rosa Madral, and on that of the survivor.

The death of Rev. Dr. Symington, of Paisley, known as the author of a work on the Atonement, is announced in the foreign papers.

Abstract of Proceedings in Congress

1000

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the requested a communication from the leg that certain documents voted by for distribution among the press published, and that since the out of last Congress, and after the British Government has published the despatches received from Admiral bracing.

are confined within the limits of the jail at Trenton, N. J., at the present time are fifteen offenders, among whom are also there is one family there, consisting of a father, mother, and several children.

DEATHS.
 Newtown, N. L., Nov. 24. Mrs. MARY HINSON, widow Hinson, aged 64 years.
 Early, N. L., Nov. 24, of consumption, Miss A. VINE, aged 90 years. Through a long and arduous life the Christian's faith was her support.

term, and at the middle of the second, and three seven weeks. Tuition, $5.
 Rent per term, $1.75; Board in families, $1.00 in Cities, 60 and 90 cents.
JAMES B. IRISH, President.
B. WALLS, Secretary.

KEY WORDS: aging; cognition; memory; personality

The steam-tug Ajax, which was wrecked in October, has been discovered near the head of Cape Cod, in fourteen fathoms of water, where she sank during a heavy gale on her way to Boston, all on board having perished. An attempt will be made to raise the vessel.

There are confined within the limits of the county Jail at Trenton, N. J., at the present time, eighteen offenders, among whom are two females. There is one family there, comprising father, mother, and several children.

JOHN T. COLLIER, of Hopkins, to Miss ~~JOHN~~ JANE STEEL, 667 Young.

 DIED.
 In Charlestown, B. L., Nov. 24, Mrs. MARY HIGGS, wife of Arnold Higgs, aged 64 years.
 In Westbury, B. L., Nov. 25, of consumption, Miss ALFRED YOUNG, aged 90 years. Through a long and able illness the Christian's faith was her support.

Use of Instruments. D 00
 Vocal Music as a preparatory study will be taught by Prof. Jones, in such a degree as will be desired. Tuition, $ 20.
 Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the first term, and at the middle of the second, and will continue across weeks. Tuition, $ 20.
 Books sent per term, $1 75; Board in Quinlan, $1 00; and $1 50; in Chiles, 60 and 50 cents. *
 JAMES R. ERISS, President.
 JACOB B. WELLS, Secretary.

