The Observer.

AN EVENING JOURNAL FOR THE FIRESIDE.

UTICA, TUESDAY, JULY 23, 1901.

PUBLISHED BY E. P. BAILEY & CO., Incorporated (E. Prentiss Bailey, President; Thomas F. Clarke, Vice President), Observer Building, Franklin street, adjoining the Postoffice.

Two cents per copy; 12 cents per week; 50 cents per month; $6 per year. Weekly, 8 pages, twice a week, one dollar per year.

Address all communications to E. P. Bailey & Co., Observer Building, Utica.

FAIR.

Washington, July 23, 8 A. M.—Forecast until 8 P. M. Wednesday: For Eastern New York, fair to-night and Wednesday; light northerly winds, becoming variable.

A Tribute to Woman.

For the second time in the history of the British Empire a King and Queen are to sit on the throne in terms of equality. The proclamation of King Edward VII that when he is crowned King his wife, Alexandra, the Danish princess, will be crowned Queen, marks a significant epoch in the government of the British Empire. Not since William and Mary jointly ruled the empire has such an event occurred. In fact, not even Mary's co-reign with William was quite so significant, for the King in this case derived his title from his Queen as the daughter of James II. Queen Anne and Queen Victoria were queens by their own right, and not by the grace of their husbands.

It would be difficult to estimate the effect of Queen Victoria's reign upon the status of women, not only in Great Britain, but in the entire world. She was the most conspicuous exponent of the forcefulness and value of woman's influence. And her successor, King Edward, shows himself a good scholar of his mother's teaching, when he declares that his wife shall sit in equality with him upon the throne. Without the history of his mother's reign in Great Britain it is doubtful that the present monarch would have so exemplified the modern idea of woman's place in the world. But the example of Queen Victoria is one that can never die. Her precepts and practices are those that will have an undying influence on the world. And the excellent example that the present King of England has set cannot fail to have its effect. There are those who delight to traduce the man who now occupies the British throne. Faults he has had and may still have. But in this particular, his decision that Queen Alexandra shall be crowned with him, he makes amends, it must be conceded, for many possible shortcomings. He gives the world, so far as lies in his power, a conspicuous example of the elevation of woman to the estate of man, and a direct share for woman in man's inheritance.

Of course it does not lie in his power to so alter the law of succession to the British crown that in the event of his death before the death of his Queen she shall inherit his crown to the exclusion of his natural heir, but it is a graceful and gracious thing that he does.

And there is another side to this: It is the effect that this action will have on the general status of women in public regard. In this country women are generally accorded a higher degree of recognition than is customary in Great Britain. But the action of the King will make more for the advancement of British womanhood than any other cause could possibly effect. The recognition of Queen Alexandra as co-sovereign with King Edward makes for the advancement of British womanhood.

A Civil History of the Confederacy.

The New York Times Saturday Review contains quite a critical resume of a book by John C. Schwab, Professor of Political Economy at Yale, entitled "The Confederate States of America." This is a history of the industrial and financial aspects of the South during our Civil War. We presume no one will deny that this is an interesting subject—quite as interesting as the military movements which have heretofore engrossed all our attention. The only difficulty is in the paucity of data. That Professor Schwab has carefully arranged and digested what material he has found accessible is apparent from the good-sized volume he has produced. If after reading it carefully through we are forced to admit that we know but little more of the industrial and financial condition of the South than we did before, the answer is evident: The South had no industrial or financial standing during the Civil War.

One question which troubled the Confederate government a good deal and the [illegible] more was "Where will we get our salt?" The blockade prevented the import of it to any considerable extent. Several of the Southern States offered a bounty on any salt found within their borders. To this the Confederate government added another bounty. The principal salt works of the Confederacy were located in the southwest corner of Virginia at a little place called Saltville. These works are said to have produced as high as 7,000 bushels of salt a day for three years and more. These works remained in operation until 1864, and were not disturbed by the Federals until the closing days of '64.

There were a good many tanneries in the South before the war, and the number was greatly increased after hostilities began. Factories for the manufacture of shoes and saddles were established. In 1862 the government started a shoe factory of its own in Richmond, but no machinery was supplied: the shoes were made by hand, by soldiers detailed for that purpose. Later a similar factory was organized at Montgomery. The collective capacity of these factories was at most 1,000 pairs of shoes a day. And they were much coarser and poorer made than the contractors furnished to the Federal Army. Could we say more?

Textile manufacturing may have been said to be unknown in the South in 1861. Cotton mills were soon, however, established in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. These produced no inconsiderable quantity of cotton cloth, and were encouraged by bounties of the State Government and the Confederate Government [illegible] from abroad. A few paper factories turned out a stock of coarse quality, but the chief supply of paper came from stock carried over before the war. Of other kinds of industries started we may [illegible] of the manufacture of hats, blankets, hosiery, candles, printer's ink, lampblack, glass, matches and even cutlery, copperas, woolens, tinware, silverplate, stoves, [illegible] and sewing machines. "It is doubtful, however," says Prof. Schwab, "whether any of these last named industries got beyond the experimental stage. The necessary machinery and skilled labor were wanting." Our author is convinced that the few who succeeded in securing a sufficient amount of capital and skilled labor must have made large profits. According to Pollard the contractors who supplied the Government with munitions of war had become rich and prosperous in 1864.

There was an enormous quantity of whisky distilled in the South during the Civil War. Gov. Brown of Georgia attempted to prevent this and threatened to persecute any one whom he caught distilling. But the Confederate government itself was more or less engaged in illicit distilling, so what could one expect? The Southerners needed all their grain for food, but the opportunity to sell it for whisky appealed to the many of them while the distilling of it opened up a vast field for speculative profits.

The financial policy of the Confederacy is discussed at some length in Prof. Schwab's book. It was an unwise policy, beyond question, but what would you have? The South was driven to adopt it by the exigencies of the case. Without any good paper they were forced to issue paper money. Finding it was too difficult to get their plates engraved, they fell back on the cheap device of lithographing their notes. These, conveying the legend on their back that anyone caught counterfeiting this note would be hanged, were distributed far and wide, until finally they became utterly worthless. So when we read that one cotton mill paid dividends of 500 per cent., a paper mill 575 per cent., and another manufactory 675 per cent, let us not forget in what these enormous profits were paid—in paper as worthless as that turned out by the Southern paper mill.

Yes, the South lost everything in the war. And it is poor consolation to be told now how it might have saved something if it had adopted Prof. Schwab's wiser financial policy.

The "Combine" and Blackmail.

A "combine" in either a Common Council or a Board of Supervisors is an organization for "graft." A "combine" has no reason for existence. Wherever one exists, it is to make money, illegally or immorally, for the men who organize it.

It is so in the Oneida County Board of Supervisors. Because it is so, the building of the Oneida County Court House was by law placed in honest hands. It was taken out of the hands of the "combine" of rascally "grafters," itching for the money to be made out of the job they thought was surely theirs.

The "combine" in the Utica Common Council is notorious. It exists for spoils. It has held and is holding public enterprise by the throat. That is its design. It cost big money to organize it, and that money must be made up, and much more gathered in.

Watch the "combine" in the matter of the Bleecker street improvement in the trolley car service. It is some weeks since the trolley authorities asked for the privilege of improving its service by laying double tracks in Bleecker street—the people of the street joining in the request, for they are to be advantaged by it. It is something in which the whole city is interested—but Bleecker street especially. It is not a new franchise that is asked for—but a needed public improvement. It means a large expenditure, chiefly in labor. But the "combine" holds back action. Meetings are held, but no report comes in from the committee, and no action is taken. Why?

The reason is as plain to be seen as the nose on your face. The Common Council "combine" is after "graft." Certain men must first have pay! It is blackmail. That is all there is of it. Just blackmail.

The first definition of blackmail has the authority of Sir Walter Scott. Webster gives it: "A certain rate of money, corn, cattle, or other thing, anciently paid, in the north of England and south of Scotland, to certain men who were allied to robbers, or moss troopers, to be by them protected from pillage." In the case of the Utica "combine" there is no question of "corn" or "cattle"—but money.

We hope the street car company will stand out against every demand. The men in control are not personally known to us, but we say to them—Better begin right. It is easier to keep right than it is to get back from the wrong track. Pay no blackmail to the Utica Common Council combine!

The Sad Case of Columbus.

It appears that nowadays a man's reputation isn't safe even when he has been dead four hundred years. Take the case of Columbus. For a hundred years and more the children in the public schools have been taught to regard Columbus as the discoverer of America. They have learned to regard the old sailor of Palos as a daring navigator who sailed his fragile craft where no man had sailed before, and who was the first white man to set foot on American soil. He has also been held up as an otherwise respectable citizen whose dignity was grossly outraged when he was sent back to Spain laden with chains, and whose lofty soul could not bear the ignominy of prison and so he died of a broken heart. That's the sort of stuff they have religiously and regularly pumped into the little craniums of the school children of America—and other countries, too, for aught we know—ever since there were public schools to go to.

But here comes Henry Vignaud. Now M. Vignaud has been secretary of the United States legation and embassy in Paris for nearly twenty years. He was born in New Orleans in 1830 and has devoted a large portion of his life to pursuits of a more or less literary nature. At one time he taught in the public schools of New Orleans, and we have no doubt had filled countless little noddles with this tommyrot and bal[illegible] about Columbus, for that's what M. Vignaud now says it is. Doubtless inspired by remorse and a laudable desire to undo, so far as may be possible, the great wrong he has done, M. Vignaud has written a book that would bring to a [illegible] suit if Columbus were [illegible]. M. Vignaud has made careful and exhaustive research, and his research leads him to denounce the content [illegible] Columbus as a humbug of the first water, an arrant knave, an unscrupulous [illegible] and a liar of the first degree. There are a few other attributes in the list, but these are a fair sample. Why, M. Vignaud says that Columbus was not the first white man nor even the first Italian to sail to America. The Scandinavians used Labrador and the coast of Maine as a summer resort long before Columbus ever saw salt water. The wealthy Scandinavians used to spend their summers at Newport, the old stone mill is not really a mill at all, but a soda fountain pavilion.

But to return to Columbus. This chap evidently got hold of some of those wealthy Scandinavians who were spending the winter on the Riviera, and loaded up with notions about America, concluded it would be a fine notion to come over and discover the country again and discover it in a language that would be more readily understood than the Scandinavian. If Columbus had lived in these days, M. Vignaud intimates, he could have got more free advertising than a circus. He was the greatest fellow to blow his own horn the world ever saw. No other man ever built up so big a reputation on such a flimsy framework. But now M. Vignaud has pulled it to pieces and showed us what poor stuff it was made of. So we will have to pull Columbus down off his pedestal and put up in his place some Scandinavian with a name all "ks" and "js" that sounds like cussing when you speak it.

The Secretary of Agriculture says the corn crop has not suffered as severely as has the oats and wheat crops. That makes the situation worse, from a Utica point of view.

The Coney Island police last night put an end to two popular amusements—the "Loop-the-loop" and the "Barrel of Love." The former was a sort of roller coaster in which the cars describe a vertical circle. The "Barrel of Love" was an enormous hogshead in which men and women were strapped in seats facing each other and sent rolling down an incline and up another, then back again, until finally the barrel came to rest between the two inclines, where the passengers were given a chance to pick up the things that had fallen out of their pockets. Their dinners were irretrievably lost. Both entertainments were terminated on the score that they were dangerous to life.

We are glad to learn that the European newspapers attach no "political significance" to the death of Mrs. Kruger. That she was a good woman all acknowledge; that she was a tower of strength to her husband some of us know. Many anecdotes are told to illustrate the transparent clearness of her character. One is to the effect that she never had more than three dresses—all black—and two hats, without feathers, as she held it wrong to kill the birds to ornament women's bonnets. She is said to have met the proposal of Oom Paul with this quaint remark: "I can bake, I can cook, I can sew, I can clean, I can scrub." That she could do all the things she said she continued to put in evidence almost to the close of her life. She fairly worshiped her husband. While others saw in him the President of the South African republic, she alone knew him as her lord and master. Her heart was well-nigh broken when she had to part from him, but it was pneumonia that carried her off. By her death Mr. Kruger loses a wife who was faithful to him in a larger, truer sense than most women are faithful to their husbands—a woman who understood him, not as a statesman, but as a man, who knew his moods and needs, and who understood all the manifold duties of housekeeping and attended to them. She was a motherly soul, was Mrs. Kruger. Peace to her ashes, and let us rejoice that no "political significance" is attached to her death by the European press.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A little Rochester girl on Saturday afternoon was crushed to death under a cake of ice, which fell from a wagon to which she was clinging. Parents are much too careless in letting their children play in the streets and especially around the familiar ice wagon with its attractive freight, the chief desire of every childish heart.—Buffalo Courier.

The recent slump in the American railroad and steel shares has caused four failures in London. No failures have been caused on this side of the water on the same account, and from this fact may be deduced the assertion that the American brokers are more shrewd or careful than their British cousins.—Troy Record.

Keep an eye on Mark Hanna and see if he does not step up and settle the steel strike in time to help out the Ohio elections.—Chicago Daily News.

That man Blondin is still in position to be haunted by the fear that he may be captured.—Manchester Union.

The college education of the man who has not learned to think is like the wig of a bald-headed man on a hot day—uncomfortable as well as unbecoming; it is of no use where it is and can be used for nothing else. A modern college education gives the possessor a certain glibness of tongue; a fund of chitter-chatter that takes the place often of conversation, but it gives no power of assimilation, no power of fact combination. Such men are builders, not destroyers. They have not the imagination to create, nor the moral courage to destroy. They are the intellectual drones that feed on the garnered stores of the workers.—St. Paul Globe.

NOTHING SERIOUS.

"The legless man is always putting his foot in it," observed the Living Skeleton to the Snake Charmer. "What has he done now?" "Last night we were having a friendly little game, and he asked the armless wonder to take a hand."—Baltimore American.

Jack—"I've resolved to give up drinking and betting and all that sort of thing." Tom—"Oh! you'll never keep that resolution." Jack—"I'll bet you the drinks I do."—Catholic Standard and Times.

[illegible] has had no lasting social advantages, has she?" "No. They've only been rich nine months."—Detroit Free Press.

"The Rev. Dr. Preachly gave a tramp a dose of Christian Science last night." "Christian Science! I thought he was a strong Presbyterian." "So he is. The tramp attacked him and the clergyman gave him a scientific uppercut on the point of the jaw that put the tramp to sleep."

"I suppose it is a long time since you have had stage fright?" "Yes," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes, "But I have box office fright every now and then."—Washington Star.

"I see the Indian Bureau of [illegible] is [illegible] the encroachments of a nefarious capital and [illegible] the Indians [illegible] are giving them only a part of a regular [illegible] expression. The whole of it would be more appropriate." "Why is the whole of it?" "[illegible]"—Chicago Post.

"I believe in calling a spade a spade." "Yes, I do, too, but it [illegible] a story some [illegible] I [illegible] golden rule on its back [illegible] it on 'altruism.'"—Chicago Record-Herald.

SOME SHORT STORIES.

Hardly Accurate.

She had returned with an M. D. from a university after her name, and had been selected to the chair of English literature in a small [illegible] college. On the day before the session opened the president was explaining to her the duties of her place. "In addition to your work in English literature," he said, with apologetic hesitation, "I should like you to take the Latin and Greek classes in elocution, and also the care of the physical culture."

"Is there no teacher of elocution?" asked Miss Jones.

"Well, not at present."

"And who has charge of the physical training?"

"To tell the truth we'll have no teacher as yet. You perhaps noticed in the catalogue that those two departments were to be supplied."

"And I was elected to the chair of English Literature?"

"Yes," the president answered pleasantly.

But he was reassured by her winning smile. "I will take the work and do what I can with it, Dr. Smith," she said brightly. "But why didn't you write me at first that the 'chair' was a settee?"—M. A. D., in The Drawer, Harper's Magazine for August.

Humor of the Day.

At a table of German and English students recently one pleasant little German was keen on showing his knowledge of English. Every sentence of his was bound to contain slang, and [illegible] a bit of slang was to him as ponderous as the voice of an oracle, and the English lads simply [illegible]. He commented brokenly on the breakfast, the table, and the kaynose in M.'s buttonhole.

But the climax was reached in answer to a question put in good German:

"Are you going to the lecture to-night, Herr B.?"

"Ach, no!" with a wave of his hand; "der ghost is retty, but der meat is feeble."

Then the quiet man straightened out our wrinkled brows by suggesting that possibly he meant, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak."—London King.

A Synonym for Mystery.

"Ask M. Walsh" is the stock saying at the bureau of navigation in the Navy Department when anything is missing or hard to find; and as is usual with stock sayings there is a story behind it, says the New York Times. One day the bureau sent a telegram to the commandant of a certain navy yard instructing him about an important matter, and ordering him to acknowledge receipt of the instructions by wire. There was no answer, but several days after the acknowledgment was received by mail. Admiral Crowninshield, the chief of the bureau, was indignant, and a hot message was sent to the commandant, demanding to know why he had not obeyed the order of the department on such an important matter. Back came a pretty tart reply, announcing that a telegram had been sent promptly on receipt of the instructions.

The bureau instituted a search, and finally found that a telegram had been sent through the Western Union to Acting Secretary Hackett and receipted for by "M. Walsh." No such man was known, and no one could be found who knew him. Finally Mr. Hackett was appealed to.

"Why, yes," said he, "that's my coachman."

Thereupon Mr. Hackett was adjured to call up his coachman on the telephone and solve the mystery. He rang up his house and directed that "Mike" be summoned to the 'phone.

"Mike," said he, "have you any telegrams for me?"

"No, sir," was the answer. "Hold on—faith, mebbe I have. Wait till I search me coat."

Mr. Hackett held the 'phone, and presently Mike's voice said: "Hello! Is that you, sir? Y-s, I found a telegram. It come fr ye three weeks ago."

It was the commandant's telegram.

Now "M. Walsh" is the department synonym for disappearance or mystery.

"Blowin' Der Crowd."

At the milk stand in Battery Park, where the fluid is dispensed for 1 cent a glass, four ragged boys were sharing a single glass between them. A man stepped up and called for a glass for himself. Observing the boys, he asked them if they could not manage a glass each. The dirtiest one of the quartette answered:

"Sure, but we ain't got—der price."

"What, only 1 cent among you all?"

"Sure. We ain't millionaires. I'm blowin' der crowd." And the little fellow's chest swelled out with capitalistic pride.

"He's blowin up," chorused the others. "But we could stand anudder if we had it."

And they all buried their smudged faces in four glasses after they had thanked "Tanks, mister" to the departing 1 cent philanthropist.

The attendants say that many a man spends a few cents at a time in making three little fellows happy.—New York Tribune.

Lord Eldon's Apology.

On one occasion a junior counsel, on their lordships giving judgment against his client, exclaimed that he was surprised at their decision. This was construed into a contempt of court, and the young barrister was ordered to attend at the bar the next morning. Fearful of the consequences, he consulted his friend John Scott (afterwards Lord Eldon), who told him to be perfectly at ease, for he would apologize for him in a way that would avert any unpleasant result. Accordingly, when the name of the delinquent was called, Scott rose and coolly addressed the judges: "I am very sorry, my lords," he said, "that my young friend has so far forgotten himself as to treat your lordships with disrespect; he is extremely penitent, and you will kindly ascribe his unintentional insult to his ignorance. You must see at once that it did originate in that. He said he was surprised at the decision of your lordships. Now, if he had not been ignorant of what takes place in this court every day—had he known you but half so long as I have done—he would not be surprised at anything you did."—The Green Bag.

The Song of Life.

One must sing of the sunshine;
One must sing of the rain;
One must sing us the songs of joy;
And one sing woe's refrain;
Yet in the end all the songs will blend
In one harmonious strain.

One must sing of the future;
With hopes and fearings rife;
One must sing of the misty past—
Its dreaming and its strife—
Yet they will meet in a chord full sweet—
The marvelous song of life.

One must sing of the mountains;
[illegible]
One must sing us the song of love,
And one in hate's shrill key,
Yet all will rise to the blending skies
In one grand harmony.

Love and hate and compassion,
Sorrow and right and wrong,
Past and future and war and peace—
Rise in an anthem strong,
And all will grow, as they ebb and flow,
To life's unceasing song.
—Josh Wink, in Baltimore American.

CITY AND SUBURBAN.

OBSERVED ABOUT TOWN.

Utica's most interesting visitor to-day is Mr. N. B. Bacon of Toledo, Ohio, brother-in-law of Grover Cleveland, but formerly a resident of this city. Mr. Bacon is an architect. He acquired the elements of his profession in Utica about thirty years ago when he was a draughtsman in the office of A. J. Lathrop, who in his time, able man that he was, dominated the architectural field in this region. Mr. Bacon tells in his latest monologue of a house that was built [illegible] that was the boring of that kind in Mr. Lathrop's houses, we builded plainly, solidly and squarely in those days. The growth of ornamentation came later, and doubtless Mr. Lathrop, if he had lived, would have conformed to and illustrated the modern tastes—as Mr. Bacon, his distinguished pupil, has done. Mr. Bacon's residence in Utica covered several years and closed in 1872. He will spend a few days in Waterville and Eaton and other villages south of Utica which were familiar to him in his boyhood. The ex-Utican is still enjoying the full strength of his mental, physical and professional powers.

If there is any one spot more than another in the city of Utica where the sidewalk should not be obstructed with telegraph, telephone or electric wire poles it is the north corners of Seneca and Columbia streets, at Fowler's cigar store, because the walk at that point is narrow and the travel through Columbia and Seneca streets at the point is very heavy. For several years there has been an ugly looking pole on the corner which has not only been a disfigurement to the street but which has been a great nuisance and an obstruction in the way of pedestrians. A few days ago a gang of men came along, knocked a hole through the flagging and beside the pole mentioned they reared another thing of beauty which cuts off several more feet from the walk. As an illustration of the high-handed manner in which the corporations owning wires are allowed to use the streets and misuse the public these two poles are well worth the inspection of all good citizens.

Some of the Forty-fourth boys went sailing on the St. Lawrence during the encampment at Cape Vincent and one of the party told a friend about it something like this:

"Some of us fellows got a boat and went out sailing. The boat went right around like that," and he described a circle with his finger on the desk. "We let go the rope and some of the fellows pulled the pole out, but the sail got in the water."

"What kind of a boat was it?"

"Oh, just a plain boat with a pole up in front. I sat in the back and held the other end—a kind of a rope."

"Did any of you know how to sail?"

"No. I knew the most about it. But it went around twice just like that. The wind must have shifted." (More than likely it was the boat.)

"Did you have a center-board?"

"What's that?"

"It's a fan-like arrangement in the bottom of the boat controlled by a handle."

"Oh, yes, we saw something in the bottom—kind of a turn piece—we thought it had something to do with the fish box."

"Did you have a rudder?"

"I don't know, I didn't see any. It's a kind of a piece of wood that goes behind, isn't it?"

"Well, how did you steer?"

"Some of the boys got out the rowers—or oars—and we steered with those."

"Did you try to get anywhere?"

"Well, we tried to go over and back and we did, too—that is, we rowed back."

Rome Deaths.

Rome, July 23. (Special.)—Mrs. Nellie Fellows, wife of Charles Fellows, died at the Rome Hospital at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, aged 28 years. Mrs. Fellows's illness dated from last Thursday, when she injured herself while assisting in moving a stove. Peritonitis ensued and on Sunday she was taken to the hospital. Mrs. Fellows had resided in Rome only since last April. In that month she came here with her family from Knoxboro, where they had previously resided. She leaves, beside her husband, four children, Elmer, Frank, Flora and Mary. She is also survived by three sisters and two brothers, Mrs. William Harp of Vernon, Mrs. George Butler of Greig, N. Y., Mrs. Abbie Hart of Beach Ridge, Ill., and William and Frank Smith of Cleveland, N. Y.

Cyril S. Rickmyer, aged 53 years, died at his home on the Floyd road, in the town of Rome, at an early hour yesterday morning. His death was due to inflammation of the bowels, with which disease he had been ill for about one week. The deceased is survived by his wife, two brothers and a sister, David of Little Falls and James and Jennie Rickmyer of Floyd.

Tramp Prostrated by Heat.

Rome, July 23. (Special.)—At about 8 o'clock last night the conductor of a passing freight train discovered a man lying between tracks three and four of the Central Railroad at a point about opposite the Tube Works. He reported the matter to the police and the ambulance was sent to the spot. It was thought at first that the man had been struck by a train, but when he was picked up it was found that there were no marks on his body, and when he arrived at the hospital the doctors announced that he was suffering from sunstroke. The man remained unconscious until a late hour last night, and when he did come to was unable to think clearly. He gave his name as William Smith and said that he lives at some place in Massachusetts. So far as can be learned he was stealing a ride on a freight train when, being overcome by the heat, he got off to rest. As he alighted from the train he succumbed to dizziness and fell between the tracks. Smith is much better to-day, but has not quite recovered his right mind.

Bad Butter.

A farmer from one of the northern towns has regularly been supplying a number of families in this city with butter. A short time ago he delivered butter to three of his customers and after receiving his pay he told them that he would call no more. Later the butter asserted itself, and these three then knew why he did not want to call again. They entered a complaint at the Board of Health and that institution has notified the farmer to come in and make peace with his erstwhile customers, or there will be something doing up his way.

Declared Off.

The strike at the Lackawanna shops in this city has been declared off, following the action of the striking workmen at Scranton. The boilermakers, machinists and blacksmiths and their helpers, numbering about eighty, quit work early in May, when the company refused to give them ten hours' pay for nine hours' work. Imported non-union labor has been at work in the company's shop in this city, but the old men, with one or two exceptions, will be given their old positions.

The Tax on Bonds.

The commissioner of internal revenue has issued a decision holding that the bonds of executors and administrators [illegible] on and after July 1. Prosecution bonds, injunction bonds, bonds to stay proceedings, bonds upon appeal, bonds upon writ of error, bonds for costs and bonds given in claim and delivery actions for property are not taxable.

Bennett's Vanilla Extract is the fixed standard of excellence. It has [illegible]. It is the finest and purest vanilla extract that can be bought.

Constable Loses Prisoner.

Thief Sentenced at West Winfield Escapes in Albany.

West Winfield, July 23.—Yesterday afternoon a fellow giving his name as Arthur Judson of Pittsburg was sentenced by Justice H. H. Wilcox to three months in Albany penitentiary for stealing property at the Haggerty House. On Saturday Judson put up at the hotel and was recognized as the man who stole an overcoat there last winter, since [illegible] he was watched. He left yesterday morning and soon thereafter it was discovered that a silver watch, pocket and chain, two rings and $[illegible] in cash had been stolen from [illegible]. He was arrested at West Exeter, brought back to this village, tried and sentenced as above noted.

Albany, July 23.—Arthur Judson, in custody of a constable from West Winfield, N. Y., who was bringing him to the Albany penitentiary on a [illegible] line car, escaped from the car at the corner of Beaver and William streets last evening. The officer jumped off the car and started in pursuit, but stumbled, fell and cut his face and hands severely. The police of the Second Precinct [illegible] him to the Homestead [illegible] and word was sent to the [illegible] that he was coming, but he never showed up there. The police searched for Judson without avail. Judson was sentenced by Judge Wilcox to three months in the Albany penitentiary for robbing a hotel at West Winfield.

DIED IN JAIL.

Death of William Brodie in the Prison at Rome.

Rome, July 23. (Special.)—William Brodie, who was sent to the Rome jail from Sylvan Beach one week ago to serve twenty days for intoxication, died at the jail at an early hour this morning. His death was due to the effects of alcoholism. Brodie had been sick since his arrival at the jail and had been under constant medical attendance since that time. Everything possible was done for him, Sheriff and Mrs. Owens giving him the care that he would have received in his own home. Although he knew the end was approaching, Brodie would give no information regarding his relatives, and all that is known of him is that he was born in Canada and was a single man.

Women Sent to County Home.

Rome, July 23. (Special.)—Julia Steiner and Mrs. Bosmer, who were sent to jail a few days ago as vagrants, were arraigned before the city judge yesterday afternoon and sent to the County Home. The women are persons of weak minds and have been for years the cause of many complaints from their neighbors, who say that the language which the women use before the children of the neighborhood is not to be tolerated. The pair were sent to jail more for the purpose of taking care of them than as a punishment, and the action of the court in committing them to the County Home is approved by their relatives.

A Pilgrimage to St. Anne.

The annual pilgrimage of the diocese of Ogdensburg to St. Anne de Beaupre will be started on Tuesday, Aug. 20, under the patronage of Rt. Rev. Bishop Gabriels of Ogdensburg. Special pilgrimage trains will be run through without change from Malone and from Rouses Point, as well as from Ogdensburg. Round trip tickets from Remsen, the point nearest to this city at which they are announced, will be sold for $6.50. The tickets are good returning until Aug. 26.

Incendiary.

Boonville, July 23.—Early Monday morning the house of John B. Howson on the river road between Beach's Bridge and New Bremen was destroyed by fire. The house had been closed since last Thursday, and the fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin. Little or nothing of the contents of the house was saved, and the loss will amount to about $1,000, with no insurance.

The Long Divorce Case.

Evidence in the case of William W. Long against Kate M. Long, an action for divorce, is being taken before Hon. I. R. Diefendorf, county judge of Herkimer, as referee, at the court house to-day. The parties to the suit reside in Utica. Southworth & Gaffney appear for the plaintiff and George S. Klock for the defendant. The hearing is private.

A Painter Injured.

New York Mills, July 23.—While Thos. Elimore was painting on the residence of J. W. Sherry, Monday morning, he fell from the ladder several feet to the ground, breaking two ribs and injuring his back. He was attended by Dr. Glass of Utica. The injuries are very painful, but no serious results are anticipated.

To Utica Presbytery.

At a session of the Troy Presbytery held in Troy yesterday afternoon the Rev. O. C. Auringer of North Woods was given a letter of dismission to the Presbytery of Utica.

New Glass Company at Cleveland.

The German Glass Company of Cleveland, Oswego county, was incorporated Monday at Albany. The capital is $12,000; the directors, Eugene Morenus, John Kime and William Dann of Cleveland.

Bible Study.

Buffalo, July 23.—Yesterday's session of the Pan-American Bible Study Congress was devoted principally to the consideration of Sunday school problems, and it proved very interesting to workers in that field of religious activity.

"Principals Underlying Graduation in Bible Study" was the subject of the first address by Rev. E. Morris Ferguson of Trenton, N. J., general secretary of the New Jersey Sunday School Association. Mr. Ferguson advocated graded Sunday schools, as being much more beneficial to the children than the class system now in use in most Sunday schools.

Another was on "Dramatic [illegible] form System of Bible Lessons," by Principal Edson I. Rexford of Montreal. The speaker discussed the various systems of Bible study now in use in Sunday schools, and then described in detail the particular system which he represented.

Porto Rico Duties.

Washington, July 23.—Attorney General Knox yesterday declined to render an opinion, which was asked for by the secretary of the treasury, on the question whether or not, under the existing laws, the secretary is authorized to refund the duties collected on goods imported from Porto Rico between the date of the ratification of the Spanish treaty and the date that the Foraker act went into operation.

It is authoritatively stated at the Treasury Department that the government will proceed immediately to refund those duties, acting upon the decision of the comptroller of the treasury. The duties amount approximately to $1,000,000.

Strike Abandoned.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., July 23.—After two months' strike yesterday machinists employed by the Lehigh Valley Railroad have given up the fight and are returning to work, not in a body but as individuals. About forty men returned to work at the Coxton shops yesterday. It is thought that there will be a rush of applications [illegible]

The 500 machinists and car repairers at the Ashley shops of the Central Railroad of New Jersey are still out, but a break in the strikers' ranks is expected at any time.

Tickets are Free for the Boss Butchers' Barbecue at Utica Park, July 26th. Ask your butcher for one.

Will Run Wednesday

The Attempt to Stifle Competition Not Successful.

Old Forge, July 23. (Special.)—People in this section are delighted with the outcome of the injunction against the steamer Adirondack, argued before Justice Merwin yesterday.

On July 11 the Fulton Navigation Company caused to be served upon S[illegible] and Joslin, proprietors of the steamer Adirondack, an injunction which [illegible] the steamer to cease service, out[illegible] the regard and inconvenience of [illegible]. Ever since the Fulton Navigation Company came into existence the [illegible] has felt that tourists are being [illegible] by exorbitant freight and express [illegible] and high fares on the line. The [illegible] fare from Old Forge to the head of Fourth Lake, or $1 for the round trip ticket. Intervening stops are proportionately high. The steamer Adirondack claims to be able to make a living [illegible] by selling a round trip ticket for the sum of 50 cents. For doing business on this basis the proprietors were [illegible].

The bond required by the court [illegible] filed to-morrow and Wednesday [illegible] the Adirondack making her [illegible] trips on schedule time. She leaves [illegible] at Old Forge at 7:30 A. M. and [illegible] M.

AMUSEMENTS.

Lott House Greets "Young Mrs. Winthrop."

An audience that filled every seat [illegible] witnessed the initial presentation of Bronson Howard's play "Young Mrs. Winthrop" at the Majestic last night [illegible] stock company. The play is a [illegible] one, and was admirably interpreted [illegible] The large audience [illegible]. The play is being repeated at [illegible] afternoon's matinee, and will be [illegible] and Thursday evenings. Those [illegible] attend will not be disappointed.

"Eagle's Nest" will hold the boards during the last three days of this week.

The Commercial Travelers.

The commercial travelers have [illegible] Summit Park for their picnic this year. [illegible] has been their custom for several [illegible] and the date of the big affair is July [illegible] next Saturday. The round trip to the [illegible] and the admission has been placed [illegible] cents. The extra ten cents above the [illegible] trip and admission rate is to [illegible] the extraordinary programme of [illegible] which the travelers propose to [illegible]. There will be a balloon ascension, [illegible] act, cake walk, base-ball and all sorts of races and contests to make fun and provide excitement for the visitors. Prizes are to be awarded, and the [illegible] promises to be about the biggest [illegible] that will be given in this vicinity this [illegible].

This Week's Vaudeville.

That this week's entertainment at Summit Park is as good as that presented last week is a sufficient recommendation. The bill, which was given for the first time yesterday, and which will be repeated every afternoon and evening during the remainder of the week, is one of the most attractive and interesting ever offered at the park. The company producing [illegible] embraces some of the best artists in the vaudeville realm. One of the most noted members of the troupe is Banks Winter, the famous ballad writer and singer, who, with his charming daughter, Winona, entertain the audience in a most delightful way for about fifteen minutes. Another member of the aggregation who is widely known for his wonderful physical strength and development is Lucalo. With the assistance of his wife he gives a most remarkable exhibition of muscular power. Then there is a German dialect recital, interspersed with whistling, by Wallie Clark; a delightful rural comedy, introducing tight rope [illegible] by Henderson and Ross, and a laughable act by the Armstrong Brothers, rural humorists. The troupe is accompanied by an efficient pianist in the person of [illegible] E. Hopkins. The show cannot be too highly commended to patrons of the park.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Barbara Haganour.

After an illness of seven years, Barbara Haganour died at 1:30 [illegible] yesterday at her home, 305 Sunset [illegible], aged 80 years. She was born in [illegible]kirchen, Bavaria, and came to this [illegible] with her husband, Henry Haganour, in 1847. With the exception of a [illegible] spent at Morehouseville the deceased since then been a resident of this [illegible]. Her husband, who was a laborer at the Utica Steam Cotton Mills, died early in 1899. Mrs. Haganour was during her entire residence here an active member of Zion's Lutheran Church and the Ladies' Aid Society connected therewith. She is survived by her daughter-in-law, [illegible] David Owens, with whom she had [illegible] twenty-four years, and by two grandchildren, Dr. Henry C. Haganour and Miss Ada C. Haganour of this city. [illegible] son, Henry Haganour, died several [illegible] ago.

Mrs. Gertrude Eckel.

Mrs. Gertrude Eckel died at 5 [illegible] yesterday, at the age of 72, at the [illegible] of her daughter, Mrs. Frank L. Br[illegible], 345 Seymour Ave. She had been ill several months. Mrs. Eckel was born in Germany, where she was married to Henry Eckel. When about 25 years of age she came with her husband to this country. They first lived in Pul[illegible] where, eleven years ago, Mr. Eckel [illegible] and two years later Mrs. Eckel came with her family to this city, where [illegible] continued to reside until the time of [illegible] death. She was a member of Cal[illegible] Church and lived a blameless life. [illegible] leaves three daughters, Mrs. Frank [illegible] Miss Lea Eckel of Utica, and Mrs. [illegible] Jellinghaus of Kenosha, Wis.; also [illegible] sisters in Germany.

To Fight Mosquitoes.

Dr. Doty to Make Experiments Looking to Extermination of the Pest.

New York, July 23.—Dr. Alvah Doty, health officer of the port of New York, announces that he will make a series of experiments looking to the extermination of the mosquito. His belief is that by working in a circumscribed [illegible] he can discover the proper method. Dr. Doty will work first on Staten Island. He expects to show the responsibility of the pest for the spread of malaria.

PRACTICAL TRAINING.

Columbia Students of School Teaching Try New Experiments.

New York, July 23.—The trustees of the teachers' college of Columbia University will use the $100,000 recently given by Mr. and Mrs. James Speyer for the building and equipment of a school near the university for the instruction of fifty kindergarten children and 200 in the elementary grades. The purpose of the school is to give the college an opportunity to try practical experiments in school teaching.

Garment Workers' Strike.

New York, July 23.—It was announced yesterday at the strikers' headquarters [illegible] of the garment workers that [illegible] and women were on strike in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City and Newark. The demands of the strikers are that they work no longer than fifty-six hours, receive a 20 per cent. increase in wages and that the contractors or middlemen be required to give a bond assuring the payment of the workers. It is possible that Joseph Barondess, who led the strike of some years ago, may be asked to lead the strike.